Blazing Oil Barge Taken in Tow

CAMPBELL RIVER (CP)—The BA Logger, a barge loaded with 50,000 gallons of diesel fuel and 3,000 of gasoline, was being towed toward Vancouver Saturday night from the Campbell River area.

Attempts to extinguish the flames were abandoned by the crew of the tug Betty Anne, owned by Superior Towing, but another boat was en-route with fire-fighting equipment.

LIGHTNING NEWEST DANGER IN B.C.'S FLAMING FORESTS

It's Grand to Be Home with the Family Again

Six weeks of waiting ended yesterday for the Cpl. D. S. MacLeod family, when father came "marching home" along with 150 officers and men of the Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry from summer camp. A good hug was given to wife, Jean, and son, Bruce.

Firefighting Costs Nearing Record

Harassed forest officials already plagued by what may be the worst fire year in B.C. history today face a new and serious threat in the form of forecast lightning storms along the coast and in the already-flaming southern interior.

Up to last night 1960 fire-fighting costs amounted to more than $1,718,000—only a few thousand dollars short of the cost of fighting fires during the same period of 1958, the worst year on record.

4,200 MEN

A forest service spokesman estimated that close to 4,200 men would be on the forest fire lines today. Some 411 fires were still reported burning throughout the province and many were out of control.

Seriousness of the situation yesterday prompted the offer of military personnel from Defence Minister George Pearkes, but provincial authorities said there was no shortage of firefighters.

TWO HELICOPTERS

The federal government had already put two large RCAF helicopters at the disposal of the forest service and an urgent request for more was reported under consideration at Ottawa.

"The co-operation of the defence department and the minister of defence has been excellent," Attorney-General Robert Bonner said last night.

USE OF SOLDIERS

A top forest service official said the use of soldiers as firefighters was neither necessary nor desirable.

"We have a plentiful supply of loggers who have been laid off as a result of the fire hazard and the closure of many logging operations, and these men are our best bet—they know their way around in the woods and many of them have had firefighting experience before," he stated.

HITCH-HIKING

Groups of out-of-work loggers have been seen walking and hitch-hiking to the interior in order to get on the fire lines, the official continued.

"The chance to earn 75 cents an hour and work 12 to 16-hour days looks pretty good to these men right now."

He said the threat of lightning storms, prime cause of forest fires, is the department's greatest worry at the present time.

"It was lightning which started all this. It is not gen-

Sees Red Ambassador

Visit Curtailed By Lumumba

OTTAWA (CP)—Congo Premier Patrice Lumumba cut short his visit to Canada Saturday and flew back to New York. An aide said shortly after Lumumba arrived in New York that the premier probably will leave for the Congo on Tuesday.

Lumumba had been expected to remain in Ottawa until this morning. There was speculation that the change in plans was connected either with domestic affairs in the Congo, or with a surprise meeting Lumumba had Saturday morning with Russian Ambassador Amasasp Arountunian.

FAILED TWICE

The Soviet ambassador in Washington, Mikhail Smirnovski, twice tried to get an interview with Lumumba during his stay in the United States capital, but failed both times.

Lumumba and Arountunian met for 30 minutes over breakfast in the premier's Ottawa hotel room. After his arrival in New York, Lumumba showed anger at questions about his meeting with the Soviet ambassador. He told reporters in New York that he had not had breakfast with any Russian—nor lunch either.

ONLY CANADIANS

Lumumba also showed signs of irritation in Ottawa, when asked for comment on his meeting with the Soviet ambassador. "I came here to speak with Canadians—that's all," he said.

UN Chief Meeting Resistance

LEOPOLDVILLE, The Congo (AP)—UN Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold was reported Saturday to be meeting resistance from some of the Congo's leaders in his plan to move cautiously in settling the disordered affairs of this young nation.

Several ministers are insisting that UN forces move immediately into Katanga province, which has declared its independence, to expel Belgian forces maintaining order there.

The UN view is that such precipitate action could only damage the country's future. Premier Moise Tshombe of Katanga has told UN forces to stay out of the rich province.

The secretary-general held two sessions with a restricted group of leaders in an effort to work out some agreement.

Red Leader Drops Hint Of New Sub

LONDON (AP)—The deputy commander of Soviet naval forces said Saturday the Soviet Union now has submarines "capable of dealing powerful blows not only against enemy navies, but also against objectives situated on remote enemy territory."

The announcement may have been designed to counter the disclosure that the U.S. Navy last week successfully test-fired two Polaris missiles, which can carry atomic warheads, from the submerged submarine George Washington.

The Soviet officer did not specifically claim that the Soviet has a new weapon rivalling the U.S. missile.

Saturday Prorogation

Dying Session Will Pass John D's Cherished Bill

OTTAWA (CP)—Parliament's last act this session will be to witness Prime Minister Diefenbaker's cherished dream come true—writing the Bill of Rights into law.

The session is expected to end next Saturday, House Leader Gordon Churchill said.

BASIC RIGHTS

The bill setting forth the basic human rights and fundamental freedoms, will become a statute of the Canadian Parliament. Mr. Diefenbaker believes it is so written that no government would dare try to remove any of its sections.

Despite a unanimous recorded vote of the Commons when it was given second reading—approval in principle—the bill has been subject to more attempts to amend it in committee than any other single piece of legislation presented to Parliament by the Progressive Conservative government.

Justice Minister Fulton, piloting the bill for the prime minister in committee, warded off most of the proposed amendments on grounds that spelling out specific things in specific language restricts the "generality" of the bill's provisions.

Once the bill becomes law, however, it is expected to give rise to many years of detailed work for Canada's Parliamentarians. The bill instructs the courts to interpret all the statute law of Canada passed since 1867 or from now on so as to uphold the basic freedoms and rights.

The bill is therefore made paramount to all other federal legislation and, as one legal source put it, will drive an ox-cart through hundreds of laws and legal interpretations. A witness before the special committee said one Toronto lawyer expects to retire on the profits he makes in litigation arising out of the bill.

The government has been reluctant to enumerate the Acts of Parliament it expects will be found in conflict with the Bill of Rights.

Storms Lash Eastern U.S.

NEW YORK (AP)—Slashing rain driven by high winds buffeted the east coast Saturday as tropical storm Brenda moved along the seaboard and headed for the St. Lawrence Valley.

Long-Tranquil Rhodesia Erupts Into Battleground

SALISBURY, Southern Rhodesia (Reuters)—African demands for political rights have turned Southern Rhodesia from a settled and trouble-free country into a battleground between black and white.

Less than two weeks ago, the self-governing British colony was going all out to aid hundreds of refugees swarming across the borders of the Rhodesian federation from the troubled Congo republic. The Central African Federation is composed of Southern Rhodesia and the protectorates of Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland.

Today, jails are filled with Africans, huge areas of African townships are burned-out ruins, 11 Africans are dead.

Hardly an office in Salisbury or Bulawayo is not understaffed because white reservists were called up into the territorial army. Housewives stay alone at home at night while their husbands are on duty as police reservists.

In trying to keep order, Southern Rhodesia's police broke a 64-year-old record—no African killed by the forces of law.

It was the preoccupation of Southern Rhodesia's Prime Minister Sir Edgar Whitehead with the welfare of refugees from the Congo, which helped spark the trouble.

He said he was too busy to meet leaders of the African National Democratic Party who wanted to submit a list of grievances. As unrest grew, he had them arrested, sparking riots and looting.

Disclosure of Secret Report

'Disgraceful Public Performance'

Liberals Make It Clear They Will Never Forgive John D

OTTAWA (CP)—The Liberals have made it clear they will never forgive Prime Minister Diefenbaker for what they call his "disgraceful public performance" in disclosing a report submitted in confidence to the Liberal government.

They hammered away at this point in the Commons for hours yesterday, pressing Labor Minister Starr to disclose to parliament the forthcoming winter unemployment situation indicated in new confidential economic reports given the Conservative government.

Mr. Starr refused. He said that to make a confidential report public would be to break a confidence.

The reference was to the "Canadian economic outlook" reports for each year, which J. W. Pickersgill (L., Bonavist-Twillingate) said are prepared by civil service economists for use by the government of the day in mapping economic policy.

Opposition leader Pearson recalled that Mr. Diefenbaker on Jan. 20, 1958, found the report submitted to the Liberal government a year earlier "tore off the page marked confidential, selected certain passages from it for partisan purposes," tabled it in the Commons "and that was that."

"A disgraceful public performance," said Mr. Pickersgill. "Shocking."

"The prime minister saw fit, for political purposes, for partisan purposes . . . to use a document which belonged to the previous government and which he had no constitutional right to make public at all.

"It was a performance which I do not think would happen in any other British parliament anywhere in the world and I did not expect it to happen here."

ALL ABOARD

With G. E. Mortimore

Every child in the public school system has a record card on file at the school office.

The card follows him all the way through school. It tells, among other facts, his examination results, intelligence test scores, what his father does for a living, and the child's name and nickname.

If a child's parents habitually call him "Smudge," or "Chesty," and they choose to confide this information to the teacher, this nickname is entered on the card. It stays there, and if the child moves to another school, the teacher knows his nickname at once.

The nickname would have a soothing effect on the child, and make him feel at home—when he was six years old.

But how does he feel at the age of 16, knowing that the pet name is still faithfully following him around?

Understanding People

Not many teachers would deliberately torment a boy or girl with a baby name. Teachers usually are understanding people, but there are some sadists among them; and even the wise and calm ones have their bad-tempered moments.

I'm not wise or calm. If I were a teacher confronted by a smug lass of 16, who had just discovered that she was pretty and thought she could make a career of it, I would be sorely tempted to snap her out of her day-dream by saying:

"All right, let's get to work—Snookums!"

That's the trouble about the idea of keeping personal records of people. It is a useful thing, and in our schools it is handled in a moderate way by teachers and officials who believe in the sanctity of private lives.

Imagine how you would feel, however, in a completely organized society where the government — and the fallible human servants of the government — had a dossier of your smallest actions, qualities and faults to use against you.

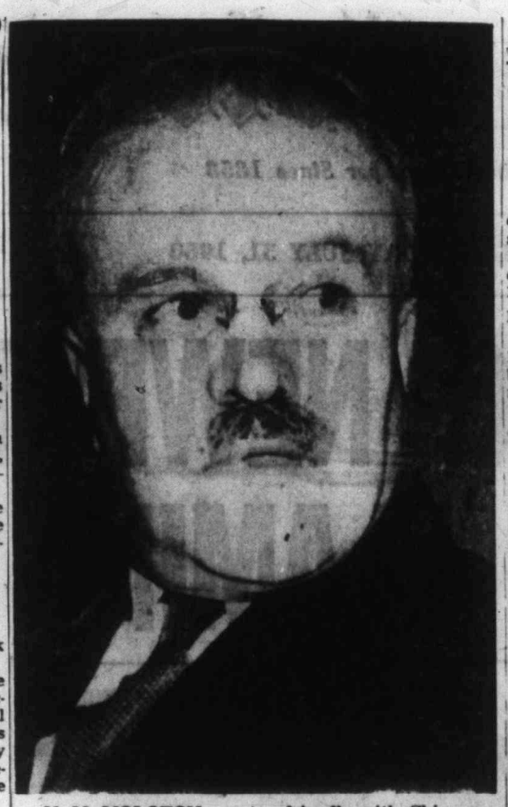

Never Escape Ghost

No matter where you went in the country, you could never escape the ghost of your past performance. You could never make a fresh start.

Imagine how life would be in a country where your district commissar or block leader knew everything about you, right down to the name you had as a baby, and he could use this knowledge to enroll you in a hearty team of builders and boosters—as though everyone in the nation belonged to a vast service club, from which none of them could resign.

I like the idea of a co-operative society in which people would work for mutual well-being, and greed would be cut to a minimum.

But if it means having my personal life documented in detail from birth to death, I don't want it.

Forests Still Flame

erally known that during a single two-hour period on July 13, a total of 500 fires were caused by lightning in an area 100 miles by 200 miles."

LONG REMEMBERED

Said another official, "July 13, 1960, is a day which will be long-remembered by the men of the forest service."

Today they may face another July 13 as thunder storms were scheduled to sweep across the lower part of the province with no promise that they would also bring rain.

SLEEPER FIRES

Lightning storms invariably leave "sleeper" fires in their wake which smolder undetected for some time before bursting into raging infernos.

In the tinder dry Kamloops forest district more new fires were reported yesterday and old ones were raging out of control.

A total of 259 fires were known to be burning in the Kamloops district last night and more than $1,000,000 had been spent there so far this year.

Largest fire in the province was the 10,000-acre Allan Creek blaze 100 miles north of Kamloops. Last night it was sweeping out of control through valuable timber stands in spite of the efforts of some 800 firefighters and dozens of tractors.

FOR 10 MILES

Observers who flew over it reported flames stretching for 10 miles and said that at one point it was burning within six miles of the CNR stop of Clemina.

Two 4,300-acre fires were out of control in the Birch Island area 60 miles north of Kamloops.

The Lich fire, 25 miles northwest of Chase, went on the rampage yesterday growing from 1,500 acres to 5,000 acres and defying the efforts of many firefighters to even reach it. In an almost inaccessible area, it was confronted by a small crew of 40 men and 10 bulldozers.

JUMPS GUARDS

Last of 68 firefighters trapped when the Lac Le Jeune fire jumped its guards late Friday were rescued by helicopters whose pilots braved billowing smoke and extreme turbulence to ferry the men to safety.

The men were taken out three at a time after the first helicopter on the scene found it could not get airborne with four aboard.

Water bombers were used on several fires in the Chase area and a total of 19 aircraft were in service on the forest fire front.

NEW FIRE

Foresters were concerned over a new fire at Maka Creek, six miles south of the still-flaming Dean fire at Spius Creek.

The 100-acre blaze is in inaccessible territory and last night was spreading toward the Dean fire which at one point covered 14,000 acres.

An official said that if the two fires joined "we will have trouble."

EXTREME HAZARD

In the Vancouver forest district, of which Vancouver Island is a part, the fire hazard was regarded extreme in some areas but no new major fires had broken out. The worst was a 5,000-acre holocaust still out of control near Harrison Lake.

The only Vancouver Island fires still active yesterday were four situated in the Courtenay and Nanaimo areas but all were in the mop-up stage and none of them had attained the status of major outbreaks.

Copters Fight Turbulence To Save 68

KAMLOOPS (CP) — Helicopter pilots called on nerves of steel to rescue 68 men trapped by a rampaging forest fire.

They took their planes down through smoke and turbulence to pick up the trapped firefighters three at a time.

Forty-eight were rescued Friday night and the rest on Saturday morning. They had been trapped when the violent Lac Le Jeune fire, 30 miles south of here, jumped fire guards, including small lakes.

Flt. Lt. Pat Matthews, 37, an RCAF pilot who had taken his Piasecki helicopter to the Interior's parched forest fire area only the day before, said it was the dirtiest flying he had ever been called on to do.

"The smoke was so thick it was hard to see anything," he said in an interview Saturday.

"The men were in a burned-out area completely surrounded by the fire.

"I had trouble getting down because of the smoke and turbulence, but getting out again was the hardest part.

"I tried getting out with four men aboard and almost didn't make it, so I set down again and tried it with three men. Then we took three at a time. I don't know how many trips we made—eight or nine."

Polaris Hits Mark Again

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP)—The U.S. Navy Saturday successfully fired another Polaris from a submerged submarine in its continuing drive to send the missile to sea as a powerful war deterrent by the end of the year.

Shortly after the launch, it was announced the missile achieved all test objectives in striking a pre-selected target area 1,100 miles down the Atlantic range. The rocket covered the distance in 14 minutes.

BUSY DAY

MONTREAL (CP) — Court interpreter Alex McKay had to use 11 of the 15 languages he knows during a single day in court. Many of the 106 men arraigned after a gambling raid were immigrants.

Gould Melts Audience

VANCOUVER (UPI) — The audience melted in warm appreciation of the playing of pianist Glenn Gould.

It was the hottest day in Vancouver's recorded history of weather, but Gould objected to the air conditioning at the Queen Elizabeth Theatre and the management turned it off.

Belgium Placated

U.S. Does Not Support Lumumba's Charges

WASHINGTON (AP)—The United States formally disassociated itself Saturday from Congolese Premier Patrice Lumumba's charges that Belgium committed aggression against the Congo by rushing troops there after rioting broke out.

"We are satisfied that the government of Belgium sent its troops to the Congo in order to protect the lives which were endangered and that it had no aggressive intent," the state department said.

The statement appeared to be an answer to Lumumba's denunciation of Belgium made while he was an honor guest of the United States Wednesday and Thursday.

Americans Outfished

SEATTLE (AP)—Canadian fishermen have been taking far more sockeye salmon than Americans, the International Pacific Salmon Fisheries Commission reported Friday.

Commission records totalled the Canadian catch at 290,180 fish. Americans had caught 168,889.

"A great variation in daily abundance of fish in the run and the high efficiency of the gear operating in all major fishing areas has caused a wide disparity in the catch," the commission said.

Ottawa Signature to Solve Peninsula Water Problem

The urgent need for water in Sidney and North Saanich will be taken care of as soon as Ottawa has signed the agreement of sale for the Elk Lake pipeline and water system to Central Saanich municipality.

Reeve H. Rupert Brown said last night, "Our neighbors to the north are in a bad way."

Already signed by Central Saanich, the agreement is expected to reach Ottawa Monday. Government officials in Vancouver think it will be approved right away.

Reeve Brown said council had been approached by Sidney village "weeks ago" with requests to buy water. "They aren't allowed to water their lawns out there," he said.

He said several groups from North Saanich had requests in for water as soon as the sale went through.

"We will wholesale water outside the municipality at 35 cents per 1,000 gallons," he said.

Policemen To Gather

At least 40 police officers from across Canada will attend a week-long meeting of the Western Canada Police Association starting Aug. 16 in the Ingraham Hotel.

A one-day meeting of the B.C. Federation of Police Officers will be held Aug. 15.

Hosts for the meeting will be by Oak Bay, Saanich and Esquimalt police unions.

Eastern Canadian delegates will report back to their parent bodies on the possibility of forming a national police body.

Mishap Faked for Suit Coach Line Charges

TACOMA (AP)—A federal judge will act next week on a bus company's motion to vacate a $19,000 judgment on the ground that it resulted from collusion.

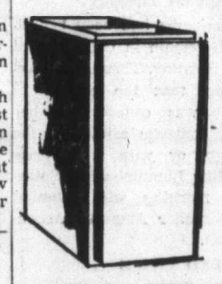

The Greyhound Corporation contended it has new evidence indicating a man who claimed his arm was broken in a fall on a bus actually had it broken intentionally before he boarded the bus.

An affidavit making the collusion charges — and the statement that a witness remarked he might be shot if he talked about the case—has beeen presented in U.S. District Judge George H. Boldt's court.

The affidavit accused Bill (Joe) Bretches, the allegedly injured man; Olympia attorney Thomas J. O'Leary; James W. Phillips, a former Greyhound driver, and a Dave Martin of Olympia of fraud and collusion.

Bretches contended in the original suit that he fell and broke his arm when a Greyhound bus driven by Phillips swerved in the highway near Olympia in September, 1958. A judgment for the $19,000 was entered in 1959.

SEOUL (Reuters)—Two deaths and dozens of injuries were reported Saturday as violence marred the first national election in South Korea since the downfall of the Syngman Rhee regime.

Two workers for a candidate were beaten to death by an angry mob, dozens of policemen were injured in fighting angry crowds, and ballot boxes and ballots were destroyed.

The Democratic party led by John Chang won a two-thirds majority in the 233-seat lower house and seemed sure of a majority in the upper house as a result of Friday's polling. The Democrats were a vocal but ineffective opposition during the rule by Rhee and his Liberal party.

QUIT IN APRIL

Two workers supporting Liberal candidate Shim Myungdjo were injured seriously. Several policemen were hurt as they tried to rescue the men from the crowd protesting that Myungdjo was leading in the vote count.

More than 60 policemen were reported to have been injured in other parts of the country. The violence occurred over a wide area and was not directed at any one group or candidate.

In Taejon, hundreds of students invaded a counting station and hurled 17 ballot boxes through windows. Ballot papers blew through the streets. The students, charging fraud, demanded new elections.

In Pusan, demonstrators kidnapped a Socialist candidate, accusing him of electoral irregularities. Members of his family were injured when his home was wrecked. He later was freed.

The Democrats rode to power on a platform of anti-Communist reunification of Korea, strengthened ties with the United Nations and the United States and normal diplomatic relations with Japan.

Leadership

Winners At Odds

SEOUL (AP)—The moderate Democrats, landslide winners in South Korea's freest election, were threatened Sunday with a revolt against leader John Chang's bid for the prime ministry.

Running on their record of struggle against ousted President Syngman Rhee, the Democratic party was handed a mandate in parliamentary elections to rule virtually as it pleased for the next four years. The question of the hour was: Who will do the ruling?

As titular head of the Democrats, Chang, 60, former ambassador to Washington, was challenged by a faction led by Yoon Bo-Sung, 62, Scotland-educated conservative.

The two factions each won about the same number of seats.

Liberals:

Politics Delay Report

OTTAWA (CP)—The Commons opposition charged Saturday that the government is timing its announcement of a new unemployment yardstick to suit its own political convenience.

Liberal and CCF MPs referred to an inter-departmental study launched five months ago, to find a single measure to replace the existing three sets of unemployment statistics issued by various federal agencies.

Labor Minister Starr told the House he hopes the report will be made to Trade Minister Churchill by the end of next week.

But he refused to hold up one item in his department's estimates until later in session, so the opposition could discuss the report.

Asked by J. W. Pickersgill (L, Bonavista-Twillingate) to hold up one item in the estimates until the report is available, Mr. Starr replied:

"No—because of the tactics used by the honorable member last year."

Mr. Pickersgill said it was unparliamentary to attribute motives. In any event, the tactics were two years ago.

The Liberal MP said on that occasion he asked the government to announce its winter works program to the Commons. Instead, he said, the government waited until after prorogation and announced the plan to a provincial Conservative association convention in Saskatchewan.

Fire Bomber Repaired By Monday

Repairs to the huge B-17 water bomber damaged when it crash-landed at Kamloops this week with wheels up, will be completed by Monday, a Fairey Aviation Co. official said yesterday.

The 2,000-gallon water tanks on the underside of the aircraft were badly damaged when the heavy plane skidded in, an official said. Repairs will cost about $5,000.

Kenneth Hibbert, acting manager of the Patricia Bay aviation firm, said a crew is working around the clock on the four-motored ex-military bomber.

The aircraft was flown to Patricia Bay after the four damaged propellers were replaced by U.S. Air Force specialists flown in from a base near Spokane.

New Show on Aug. 2 to 20

A special tourist attraction during the month of August will be the exhibition of paintings to be held in the Douglas Room at the Hudson's Bay Company store.

The exhibition is being staged by Miss Emily Sartain, well known flower painter in water color. The display will open on Aug. 2 and continue to Aug. 20. The artist will be in attendance daily.

Featured in the exhibition will be paintings of local B.C. wild flowers, flowers from many of Victoria's lovely gardens, alpine flowers from the B.C. mountain meadows, and a display of paintings of local fungi and lichens. There will be something to interest both the horticulturist and the naturalist.

Regiment Sets Picnic

Canadian Scottish Regiment (Princess Mary's) will hold its annual picnic Aug. 7 at Goldstream Inn Park. All members and ex-members and their families are invited to attend.

To ensure that everyone has transportation, cars will assemble at Bay Street Armory at 12.30 p.m. Adults are to bring their own food although hot dogs, ice cream and soft drinks will be supplied for children.

Because violence has been treated so sloppily here in London, it is perhaps not too much to say that bits of London are getting to look a bit savage."

Responsibility Comes First

IT is extremely unlikely that either the Canadian or American governments have given Premier Patrice Lumumba any assurance that further financial or technical aid will be provided his country other than the continuation of help already provided under the United Nations commitment.

There is little doubt that Mr. Lumumba came to this continent with the hope of raising money to assist in the monumental task of restoring law and order and some semblance of economic balance to the Congo.

Nevertheless, however strong the general impulse to re-finance a struggling young country is, it should be tempered with caution. Mr. Lumumba must be made to realize that his irresponsible and dangerous threats to involve the Soviet Union in the Congo disturbances and to "even enlist the help of the devil himself" did not fall on sympathetic ears in the Western world.

He must also understand that here it has never been considered wise or statesmanlike for a leader to desert his country in its time of peril.

Since his arrival in Canada, Mr. Lumumba has set himself up as a spokesman of African unity throughout the whole of the dark continent. It is interesting to note that other African leaders have remained strangely silent on the matter. One feels that Mr. Lumumba has neither the whole confidence nor support of his own countrymen let alone that of the other independent African nations.

It is not disputed that it is Canada's duty to help the less fortunate people of the world, but any aid it gives must be administered by responsible parties.

It would be interesting to know if the Congolese Republic intends making any restitution to the hundreds of Belgian settlers who fled their homes and businesses during the rioting. Mr. Lumumba should also disclose what happened to the billion-dollar Congo development plan inaugurated by the Belgian government some three years ago.

These are but a few of the aspects which must be considered before Canada makes any move toward a give-away plan with the Congo as the recipient.

This country's sympathy goes out to both the black and white population of the Congo, but it should only consider further financial assistance when it is demonstrated that the country is under responsible and democratic leadership.

Removing the Uneasiness

BRITISH concern about the flights of U.S. aircraft based in the British Isles has been lessened by fresh assurances given by the state department at Washington. The uneasiness stemmed from the fact that the American reconnaissance plane shot down in the Barents Sea by Soviet airmen, had taken off from an American base in Britain. Notification procedures have been tightened, it is said, so presumably no such flight will leave again without British awareness.

Premier Khrushchev took sharp advantage both of the U-2 and the Barents Sea incidents to threaten all allies of the United States. In effect he told them Russia might wreak vengeance if they permitted the use of American bases in their countries for flights in the Soviet neighborhood. The Soviet premier cannot expect to bully free nations to compliance or weaken the Western defensive alliance, but these incidents have indicated the need for closer co-operation among the Western group. Where American aircraft are foreign-based their operations should be within the knowledge of these home countries. The liaison hitherto apparently has been weak.

Canada was among the nations aimed at by Mr. Khrushchev, and here also the Soviet premier need not hope that this country will bow to his dictum. A greater degree of consideration from Washington nevertheless is as important here as elsewhere. If allies are to work together there should be no secrets withheld; the national sovereignties are equal in all respects, or should be. Size is not the criterion.

The United States is apt to overlook the sensitive position of the nations which grant it bases, and the need for harmonious adjustments to prevent ill feeling or misleading conclusions. In the case of its next-door neighbor there can be small excuse for any unilateral action which might cause disquiet, or upset the balance which should exist between two such friendly allies.

Boon to Pleasure Boaters

FOR several years there has been heavy pressure from various directions for extension of facilities at Sidney to clear border-crossing pleasure boats. The Dominion government deserves full marks for coming up with a much better plan. The new customs and immigration station at Bedwell Harbor, South Pender Island, affords American visitors and returning Canadians much faster service than anything Sidney could provide even if the port were enlarged and the staff augmented.

At Sidney the skippers of pleasure boats needing clearance are in competition with the ferries for the attention of the federal officials and at rush times there have been long though unavoidable delays sometimes. At Bedwell Harbor they have the undivided attention of the customs and immigration examiners; consequently clearance is effected in a few minutes, unless there happens to be a line-up of boats.

As an entry port Bedwell has another important advantage: adequate float space in smooth, sheltered water obviating risk of damage to moored vessels. At Sidney the wash set up by every passing ship causes much annoyance and sometimes damage in the congested basin, where boats often have to lie two or three abreast.

The switch to Bedwell Harbor of probably 50 per cent or more of the traffic which used to belong to Sidney may be causing some loss of trade to the Sidney merchants, though most likely less than may be imagined. Those who need to shop for provisions will continue to call at Sidney for the official formalities. The existence in Sidney of a branch of B.C. government retail trade not available at Bedwell should be sufficient guarantee of that.

Interpreting the News

Marginal Advance Made

By ED SIMON
Canadian Press Staff Writer

A RECENT Geneva dispatch reporting East-West agreement to define the threshold for a permanent nuclear test ban, at a seismic magnitude of 4.75, is a small but significant step in the direction of discovering what kind of atomic tests are to be outlawed when the big powers succeed in framing an acceptable treaty.

It does not mean that such a treaty is anywhere near the point of signature, but it comes at a time when Western politicians are considering a Russian proposal to permit a quota of three annual inspections by international teams of the sites of possible test explosions on the territory of a nuclear power.

It was the first time a Soviet spokesman has committed himself to anything further than agreement in principle that such inspections could occur at all.

While Western spokesmen were quick to label the quota inadequate it would be unrealistic, in the light of Russia's current sensitivity about potential espionage conducted by international investigators, to expect a more reasonable Soviet offer on the frequency of inspection tours in the near future. No treaty can be signed until this key point is settled.

The fact that two moves towards agreement, however infinitesimal, have emerged in as many days from the nuclear talks at least indicates that Nikita Khrushchev has no present intention of consigning them to oblivion.

* * *

As long as some kind of brake is applied to unrestricted tests of nuclear weapons, the world at least has the satisfaction of knowing that it is not doomed to possible extinction or irreparable damage to the health of its inhabitants without the formality of an outbreak of hostilities.

Thinking Aloud

". . . of shoes—and ships—and sealing wax—of cabbages and kings."

By TOM TAYLOR

THE Canada Trust building at the corner of Broad and View doesn't know it, but it houses some of my splendiferous years. When they are gone, years are always splendiferous, you know. This was where the Old Lady of Broad Street used to reside, you may remember, and when they tore down the old bricks part of me went into oblivion. That was the sad thought that struck me as I passed by the other morn. One doesn't like being dropped into the discard. And then I looked again and saw the slick, shiny, modern frontage of Canada Trust and I was cheered.

Just for old time's sake, though, I perambulated the car round a few downtown blocks. I was looking for the smoke pall I've been reading so much about. It must have taken ship for the mainland, to Vancouver perhaps where it would feel more at home. Truth compels me to report that the air was crystal clear, the sky was blue and the sun shining undimmed, and if it hadn't been that the latter gets in one's eyes on looking up I could have gazed straight through to the heavens themselves.

One should speak of one's city with appropriate modesty and I would not break this rule for all the tea in China. I don't cotton too much to Chinese tea anyway, nor take boastful political utterings as an example. But a reader asks me what it was that Kipling said of Victoria and Kipling was such a VIP you will excuse me if I repeat his panegyric. It will help to fill this space, too. To wit, therefore:

"To realize Victoria you just take all that the eye admires most in Bournemouth, Torquay, the Isle of Wight, the Happy Valley at Hong Kong, the Doon, Sorrento and Camps Bay; add reminiscences of The Thousand Islands, and arrange the whole around the Bay of Naples, with some Himalayas for the background."

This would make me feel smug did I not wonder if such enthusiasm was not engendered by a desire to please his hosts and, maybe, an extra glass of port.

Kipling was in Oak Bay when he said all this, gazing out towards Mount Baker, whose majesty is a daily delight from many parts of town. My own favorite vista, of which I never tire, is glimpsed coming over the golf course road towards Newport. For me the combination of green sward, brown rock, blue sea and white-capped mountains is enough to invoke thanks for being alive. There may be finer sights in the world but this one ranks high in pictorial appeal.

Talking of the scenic beauty of Victoria, having been put in the mood by Kipling, there are of course the Olympics. What we should do without them I dare not contemplate, even if their snow-clad slopes send some shivers over the town. Actually of course they are not ours but like Mount Baker we see them better than their owners do. Our U.S. visitors have to follow the gulls over here to get a good look at their own property. And it takes their breath away.

What a blessing that international law doesn't permit patent rights over what the eye can see. Otherwise Victorians might have to pay the U.S. treasury for admiring American mountains. And our taxes are high enough, thank you.

Letter from London

New Arena for Foreign Affairs

By RICHARD L. THOMAS

PRIME Minister Harold Macmillan has resolved upon a new kind of foreign policy. The projected appointment of the present Earl of Home as foreign secretary has aroused a wild storm of disapproval from the parliamentarians, including some of Mr. Macmillan's own back benchers, but the motive has received considerable approval outside parliament.

The objections to the Earl of Home are not personal. Politically he had a brief apprenticeship to the foreign office as an under-secretary in Winston Churchill's caretaker government in 1945, and there has been little criticism of his handling of the Commonwealth Relations Office. The objection is to the fact that the Earl of Home sits in the House of Lords and not in the House of Commons.

That is one of the main reasons why Mr. Macmillan wants the Earl of Home as foreign secretary, for the Lords are infinitely more tolerant and far less exacting in their demands. The idea is that a strong under-secretary should represent the foreign secretary in the Commons.

The motive, of course, is to give the foreign secretary more opportunity to study foreign affairs without the distraction of persistent and often irritating questioning in parliament. It is suggested that at least half the time of the foreign secretary has been spent dealing with opposition criticism and concentrating on parliamentary points instead of being devoted to the conduct of international relations.

Some of it may be due, of course, to the personality of the present occupant of the office, Mr. Selwyn Lloyd. He has never been a very adequate foreign secretary and he would have disappeared years ago except for a rather misguided sense of loyalty on the part of the prime minister. Mr. Lloyd has always been loyal to Mr. Macmillan, unwavering in his support, but never very popular in parliament or the country. His resignation has been announced unofficially several times. Each time Mr. Macmillan has insisted that he remain, as a demonstration of personal devotion.

Now that Mr. Macmillan can see the way to appointing Mr. Lloyd chancellor of the exchequer it would seem that he has hopes of grooming him for a potential prime ministership, but it would seem highly improbable that he would be accepted by the Conservative Party and still less by the country. He lacks qualities which make a popular figure, and as one of the architects of the Suez intervention he lost a great deal of what sympathy he had.

But while a foreign secretary in the Lords may irritate the Commons, the policy has a great deal to commend it. We may be proud of our democracy but it can be a bad master, especially when it demands more time than the conduct of foreign affairs. The Earl of Home will be able to give a great deal more consideration to actual negotiations and studying international problems than he would if he had to face the daily banter of the House of Commons, where many of the questions he is called upon to answer are really designed to make political capital rather than assist in or be informed about foreign affairs.

To what extent our conduct of foreign affairs suffers by a certain amount of irresponsibility in parliament is always debatable, but it is certainly true that any foreign secretary is bound to be distracted by being called to account for his stewardship more frequently and more persistently than any other minister.

In the Lords there is much less tendency to try to make political capital, and generally speaking a far higher and more useful standard of debate — possibly for the good and sufficient reason that members of the upper House are not framing their questions or advancing arguments with the next election in view. And the lords are not so exacting.

It could well be that a foreign secretary in the Lords can provide Britain with a more efficient foreign office, and it will certainly restore some of the lost authority of the Lords, which for too long has been a place which has received secondary information rather than primary. Many parliamentarians have urged that there should be more ministers in high office in the Lords.

One thing is certain—if the Earl of Home is confirmed as foreign secretary—he may change the effective pattern of parliament. It is time a few cobwebs were blown away.

When the Truth Hurts

(From The Powell River News)

THE Prince George Board of Trade told its local newspaper: "You should only print stories that are optimistic or reflect to the credit of the city. We in Prince George can do without The Citizen . . . how can we sell our city if it keeps printing pessimistic stories like that?"

The "pessimistic stories" referred to were articles by The Prince George Citizen revealing the facts about unemployment in that city. Following an earlier announcement by Premier Bennett that approval had been given for the construction of the Pacific Northern Railroad, unemployment quickly rose from about 700 to 2,200 in Prince George, as workmen flocked in, hopeful of jobs on the big project. Many spent their last few dollars to get to the northern city.

The bitter truth is that it will be many months before any construction help will be needed, and it is natural that the newspaper should try to prevent hardship on innocent people.

When a board of trade or a chamber of commerce presumes to censure a newspaper for printing the facts and instead demands that it print "only stories that are optimistic" then indeed it has ceased to fulfil its function as a creative and leading force in a community.

Prince George apparently has a newspaper; it hasn't got a board of trade.

Fortunately, this is an unprecedented exception, for all other boards of trade, while dedicated to community advancement, see no prospect of advancement in growing ranks of unemployed. A responsible board of trade is usually one of the first to warn about a community's imbalance when employment drops.

WIRELESS was first used at sea to catch a criminal 50 years ago.

After an exchange of messages between the CPR liner Montrose and wireless stations in Montreal and in England, a man travelling aboard the Montrose was identified as Dr. Hawley Howard Crippen, wanted for the murder of his wife.

The "son" travelling with him was identified as Miss Ethel Clare Leneve, his ex-stenographer, who was disguised in boy's clothes.

THE horse-drawn vehicular traffic in colonial Victoria could be dangerous, 100 years ago.

"While Parker's omnibus was returning yesterday noon from Esquimalt, with a load of passengers from the steamer, the axletree of the vehicle snapped and the occupants (14 in number) were deposited in the miry road.

"Beyond a few slight bruises, a number of torn dresses and coats and a terrible fright, the passengers sustained no injury. The accident occurred near the Halfway House."

"A couple of horses, attached to a large wagon, yesterday morning started from the front of McCrea's auction room on Wharf Street, and ran up Yates at a furious pace.

The Packsack

Of GREGORY CLARK

AT a garden party I sat under an apple tree with a doctor and another well-known physicist. Their conversation was high over my head, having to do with some new vista of science.

"I take a lot of pleasure," said the physicist, "out of reading the papers delivered at the Royal Society back in the eighteenth century. Even some of Newton's speculations are pretty fantastic, and many papers delivered in the early part of the nineteenth century are hilarious, in the light of modern science. It is difficult to believe thinking men would hold many of the ideas and views expressed less than a hundred years ago."

"That's why I," said the doctor, who is a famous leg-puller, "never read papers at our medical conferences and societies. I don't want anybody laughing at me, a hundred years from now."

"Aw, but . . ." said the physicist.

"I imagine," said the doctor, "the profound opinions you hold today will excite as much hilarity when read a century hence as is inspired by those early papers of the Royal Society."

I think if the apples above us had been riper, one might have dropped on the physicist's head.

Land of my sires! what mortal hand
Can e'er untie the filial band,
That knits me to thy rugged strand! —SIR WALTER SCOTT.

The Second Driver

Mr. Ealdhelm-White states that he has 'many times come up to a column of traffic, travelling between 25 and 30 miles in a 50 or 60 zone."

Therefore the second driver in the column must have been satisfied with the speed of the driver of the leading car, and so is equally guilty.

In 35 years of driving in Saanich and elsewhere, the writer has never considered the white single or double line to be the cause of car parades on the open highway.

The second driver should either pass or fall back at least 100 feet to allow the third car to pass into second place.

Effortless Income

That was a nice composite list of hard-working wage and salary workers published by the revenue department on taxation statistics (Colonist, July 28). But sticking out like a sore thumb was a "paid group" called investors, people whose incomes are derived through ownership, not effort.

To the multitude of the brainwashed, modern society is confusing enough. Why add to it?

Oak Bay Tradition

A political report in the Colonist for July 29 uses the words "traditionally Liberal" in describing Oak Bay.

From 1871 until 1940 Victoria elected a Conservative federally and the area comprising the present Oak Bay municipality gave Conservative majorities even when it was part of Nanaimo in the days of the late Mr. Dickie.

Provincially Oak Bay came into being in 1938 and was represented by a Conservative until 1952, some 14 years. In the last federal election the Conservative vote was the greatest in the history of the riding.

If tradition is to be the measure, Oak Bay is Conservative.

Americans on Sugar Island look across to Canada for help.

Cut-Off U.S. Island

They Want to Join Canada

By PETER WARD
Telegram News Service

Canada's high standard of living and the booming economy of Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., is luring a 200-square-mile border island in the St. Mary's River away from the United States.

It's probably the first time in history an American possession has been ready to trade the Stars and Stripes for the Union Jack.

That's what the citizens of Sugar Island are anxious to do, unless Michigan State can match Ontario's services, and town fathers in the American Soo can match the progressive ways of their Canadian neighbors on the river's other side.

Island residents claim their American city is developing at a snail's pace compared to the Canadian Soo.

The 300 permanent residents on Sugar Island want free ferry service, state roads and a telephone service for a beginning.

"If we don't get better communications," said John D. Hamilton, chairman of the citizens' committee, "we'd like to become part of Canada. More than two-thirds of the islanders are with me on this."

In Ottawa, Northern Affairs Minister Hamilton said Canada would be interested in buying Sugar Island from the U.S., but would first like to know the price and look the place over.

He said the matter hadn't officially come to the government's attention yet.

"If we don't get some action, it will," threatened Gil Nelson, chairman of the businessmen's committee. "We've got to do something."

Sugar Island lies less than a mile below both cities. It is 11 miles wide and 23 miles long. In the 1890s, before the ship canal was built, water between the American mainland and Sugar Island was so shallow residents could drive horses across. Some say a footbridge there was torn down by the canal builders.

Now the gap between the island and the mainland is perhaps 300 yards. It costs 85 cents each way for a car and two persons to make the ferry trip.

On the Canadian side, Sugar Island so close to the mainland in places, even an amateur golfer could drive a ball across dry.

A few miles downstream, Canadian St. Joseph's Island enjoys free Canadian ferry service, and hence has a far greater population and a thriving tourist business.

"How can Canada, with only 18,000,000 people, give St. Joe's a free ferry, when the U.S., with 180,000,000, can't afford one for us?" said Mr. Nelson.

The drastic request to be sold or given to Canada came soon after Sugar Island residents were disappointed by being left out of plans for the new St. Mary's Bridge, to be built over the ship canal, north of the locks.

Nelson claims the bridge could have been built for several millions less at Sugar Island. He is an official adviser to the bridge authority and has never been called for advice.

Next move for the islanders may be an attempt to get an injunction stopping the construction of the $18,000,000 bridge. Work is scheduled to start this fall.

Nelson claims planning for the bridge was illegally done.

There are about 75 miles of road on the island, of which less than 10 miles are paved. In places metal culverts jut eight inches above the gravel roads.

The only telephone is a U.S. Coast Guard line from the south end to the north, not used by civilians except in emergency.

For 300 people, the island's services are perhaps adequate, but in summer tourists swell the population to nearly 2,000. In the last 10 years, according to Mr. Nelson, more than 100 permanent residents have moved from the island because of isolation.

"You can't stand still," Nelson said. "Unless you progress, you'll die. If we can't change their indifference, then joining Canada is the only way we'll get ahead, and I'm all for it."

Letter to Khrushchev

Pride and Foreboding

By DUART FARQUHARSON
From London

A surprised Britain has greeted with pride the thousand remarkable words in which Prime Minister Harold Macmillan has put so well its collective feelings about "the present sad state of the world." In foreboding suspense it awaits Mr. Khrushchev's reply.

The prime minister's personal letter to the Soviet ruler is not as unprecedented a diplomatic step as some observers believe. For the past year the two leaders have been exchanging private notes which have never leaked to the press. This time Mr. Macmillan chose to make public his letter for obvious propaganda reasons.

The government here believes that Mr. Khrushchev placed real value on this single line of frank communication between East and West His reply—not the substance of it, which is unlikely to reverse recent statements, but its tone — will indicate whether he still does.

Should it be harsh and unyielding, Mr. Khrushchev will in effect be slamming the door on communication and co-existence. Such a reply would mean that Soviet policy has been reversed, the Foreign Office believes, either on Mr. Khrushchev's own initiative or because domestic pressures have swung him round.

The threats and accusations that the Soviet leader has recently swung in every direction raise the question whether there is not, as Mr. Macmillan put it in his message, "a new trend in the conduct of Soviet foreign policy." For the British government much of the answer will depend on the words chosen by Mr. Khrushchev in making his reply.

Looked at in this light Mr. Macmillan's letter is not so much a new initiative as the last step of the initiative the prime minister began last year when he visited Moscow.

It would be wrong to say the prime minister is trying to regain for Britain the leadership of the Western alliance, though he may not be adverse to giving some Englishmen that impression. Mr. Macmillan has long been occupied — pre - occupied, some would say—with the danger of slipping into war needlessly. He believes that the First World War, which he fought in, could have been prevented. The situation now, he fears, is not entirely dissimilar.

In his letter to Mr. Khrushchev he in effect says, "You're in danger of going too far with your sabre-rattling. Lay off now before it's too late." Putting his message in a dramatic, personal way, he hopes to bring home the point: "Take it from me, whatever you or your advisers think, this is what the West itself believes."

One Member Thinks So

Is Parliament Senile?

By DON HANRIGHT
Canadian Press

Several MPs held a mirror to Parliament last week, and disagreed on what they saw.

Harshest criticism came from Douglas Fisher (CCF, Port Arthur) who described the Canadian institution as senile. "I think we are a living example of cultural lag," he said.

As Mr. Fisher saw it, a major problem is that Canadian MPs come from varying backgrounds and the Commons does "not have the kind of person focussing into it as in some other parliaments."

United States senators and congressmen were much more educated to a full-time political career. In Britain the MPs seemed to have a common educational background and aspiration.

Mr. Fisher said the Commons is still acting as if this were the mid-19th century. He spoke of a "latent crisis" in the way Parliament is run in this country and called for a new approach to make it the forum which he and other MPs think it should be.

They and others spoke during the Commons study of estimates for legislation—the one time that Speaker Roland Michener answers for a department on the vpting of money.

Mr. McCleave pounced on the CCF member's reference to a "cultural lag" and described it as a term popular among social scientists.

"It indicates a feeling on the part of those who use this argument that Parliament should be as bright and shiny as next year's model car with souped-up horsepower, covered with chrome and completely geared for all the vicissitudes of life in the 20th century."

At the risk of "pressing young and presumptuous" views on the Commons, Mr. McCleave, 38, added:

". . . My idea is that the people are quite content to have an institution that has about it a faint odor of mothballs, one that does not show signs of becoming a factory with modern and swift assembly lines and the use of automation. I think they prefer Parliament to be perhaps a little bit slower than the fast pace of the 20th century."

Mr. Regier said it would be a sad day if Parliament were to be governed by experts.

"If there is something radically wrong with the institution of Parliament or the members who compose Parliament, it is my opinion there is something radically wrong with the Canadian electorate, because I am convinced that we in this chamber are no more and no less than the people of Canada as a whole."

He added at another point:

"I do not like the inference that those who may be elected to this House do not deserve to be here. I have a tremendous respect for the right of the people to send here whoever they darn well please."

"My idea of Parliament is that it should be composed of people who have achieved some position in the community—I do not necessarily mean in a money way—people who have done some service of some kind in business or otherwise and who therefore have something to contribute when they come to this House.

Through the entire debate ran one theme, especially from the opposition—too much committee and house work piled up in the tail end of every session, and not enough time for MPs to do their work properly.

"Surely we are adult enough in this country for members to sit down and decide to make better use of our time and facilities," said Arnold Peters (CCF, Timiskaming).

Nixon Personality

Turn Minus to Plus

By ARTHUR EDSON
(Associated Press)

Whenever distressing news reaches Vice-President Richard Nixon, he may look it over carefully, acknowledge its gloomy character; and then thoughtfully say something like this:

"It's too early to say if this is a plus or a minus."

Although he never intended it this way, it may be a tipoff on his amazing career.

No other U.S. public figure has been able to take a minus and change it to a plus so successfully as Richard Milhous Nixon.

Not since the earliest days of the U.S. republic has the vice-presidency been looked upon as anything but a one-way ticket to political oblivion. Only the death of a president could save him from complete obscurity.

Yet Nixon was able to smash this tradition so irrevocably that he had the delegates roped and branded before they ever assembled.

Although Nixon, especially in his past, has been able to stir up tremendous hates, even his best friends will agree he doesn't create tremendous enthusiasms. The reason lies deep in the man himself.

Basically, Nixon is extremely shy.

Although he does a good job at shaking hands, at throwing in the thoughtful word to show he's alert to what's being said, he doesn't act like a man who thinks this is the pleasantest way to spend an evening.

Nor is he especially moving on the platform, even though he usually attracts excellent crowds.

Nixon won because long ago he knew where he wanted to go, charted a course that would get him there, and then persistently followed it.

Few people plan ahead like Nixon.

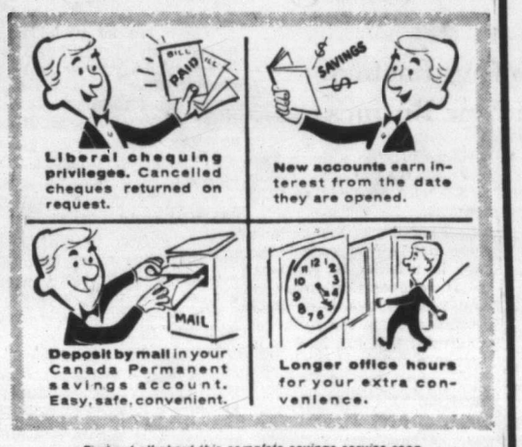

If possible, each speech, including those that appear to be off-the-cuff, is carefully worked out. Each move is carefully premeditated.

Don't Panic

If You're Fired—Admit It

Pamphlet Supplies The Answers

NEW YORK (UPI) — "You're fired!"

These two short words are the most devastating in the English language to most people. They probably have caused more anguish and heartbreak than is normally recognized, mainly because their victims suffer this phase of business life alone and in relative silence.

You may never have been confronted with this situation, but don't get the idea that you never will. Top executives as well as office boys are unwitting victims.

MONKEY ON BACK

According to Phil Kelly, president of the Sales Executive Club of New York, most executives live with this "monkey on their backs."

He has prepared a pamphlet, "What to do when you get fired," to help people caught in this situation with a bit of sound advice and counsel.

FIRST ADVICE

Kelly's first bit of advice is, "If you get fired—admit it." Too many people, he says, feel discouraged and disgraced because they have been fired.

It's no disgrace, he states, adding that there are a hundred and one reasons why forced severance might have been necessary.

BIG HEADACHE

Many times, Kelly points out, a firing gives the boss as big a headache as it does the employee. "But it's all arithmetic and strictly impersonal."

Losing a job is seldom fatal, except to pride and self-confidence. The outcome of the situation depends entirely upon the man, Kelly says. He can attack the problem deliberately, aggressively and with logic, or get jittery about the entire situation.

PRODUCT IS YOU

The pamphlet points out that looking for a job is similar to marketing a new and unknown product. In this case the product is you. The pamphlet offers a formula for analysis of your biggest assets—the qualities your next employer is looking to buy.

The resume is listed as the most important link in the chain of job-seeking. "It has to be long enough and complete enough to tell the individual's story in a way that reflects his character, experience and potentials in the best light."

Kelly says the want ads, agencies, direct mail and cold calls all play a part in getting the resume into the hands of those who might use your services.

World-Wide Reputation

Canada 'Spies' from Air For Peaceful Purposes

By DON GRANT

TORONTO (TNS)—The picture above has boosted Canada's world-wide reputation in the U-2 business of aerial photography.

Canadian lenses don't search out the rocket pads of possible enemies. But they do scan the rivers for power sites on friendly lands—particularly in South America and Southern Asia.

During the past year Canadians have recorded on film a previously unknown, 1,600-mile stretch of the world's seventh largest river, the Mekong.

SOUTH CHINA SEA

It flows to the South China Sea through sporadic trouble spots — from headwaters in Tibet and China through the mountains and jungles of Burma, Thailand, Laos, Cambodia and South Viet Nam.

The peoples — 17,000,000 of them in the last four nations—have low standards of living and border Communist countries.

PRELIMINARY STUDIES

In 1951 the UN made preliminary studies of the lower Mekong, south from the Burmese border. A co-ordinating committee to study and develop the river was set up.

Nine countries pooled $8,500,000 for the job and Canada was assigned to the survey-mapping project, which cost $1,300,000 plus an additional $100,000 from the four riverside states.

Hunting Associates of Toronto were appointed managing engineers. They called on Canada's six other air survey companies to help.

MAPPING STARTED

Mapping has started and the 26 Canadians have returned.

Canadian Robert Brocklebank, manager of the project, told me the survey will result in better agriculture, better hydro for industry and better river navigation.

The dams will give farmers three rice crops a year instead of one.

The Canadians on the job lived in 110-degree temperatures and 90-to-100 humidity, camping in the jungle for months.

Contact with the outside was by radio and a Beaver aircraft.

"The people were very primitive, but peaceful," says Brocklebank. "They've had little contact with foreigners, let alone planes. Their standard of living is low. But they are happy."

FIRE CHIEF ROWLES
. . . slide looked good

Dream Comes True

He Followed Sirens to Job

Like most youngsters C. E. Rowles had dreams of being a fireman when he grew up in Victoria.

He attended the old Bank Street School when the fire hall, now an apartment block, was still functioning.

He used to hear the bells and sirens when the trucks answered alarms. "Sliding down the pole looked pretty good, too," he says.

BACK OF MIND

He did a stint in the air force during the war, then followed a variety of jobs, but always in the back of his mind was the desire to become a fireman.

In 1953 he became a naval firefighter, fulfilling this quiet dream. Two years later he came to Central Saanich with his wife, Ruth, and two children, Sandra, 12, and Janice, 7.

They bought a home at 1183 Wallace Drive, and he immediately joined the volunteer fire department.

He became chief after serving one year as a fireman and two as a captain of one of the three fire trucks.

Mr. Rowles finds the investigation part of a fireman's job the most fascinating. As chief of the district he is the representative of the Vancouver fire marshal's office for Central Saanich.

He speaks with pride of one case when a Saanich youth set fire to a barn, using gasoline to get it going.

In the investigation that rapidly followed, Chief Rowles and Central Saanich constable Fred Wenden located and arrested the youth, who confessed. He was tried and convicted and sentenced less than 12 hours after the fire started.

How do the children feel about having a fire chief for a daddy?

"Kind of proud, I think, after all it's quite an honor. It doesn't happen every day."

He plans to continue his work with the volunteers as long as they want him in office.

The chief's position is put to a vote by department members every two years. Volunteers are not paid. The chief has an expense account for checking oil installations and doing investigation work.

Replace Election-Year U.S.

De Gaulle, Adenauer Map West's Initiative

PARIS (Reuters)—President Charles de Gaulle and Chancellor Konrad Adenauer of West Germany drew up concrete plans for bolstering the Western Alliance — but declined Saturday to say what they are.

Adenauer's spokesman said "strong new impulses" will be given to the various free world alliances as a result of private talks between the men Friday and Saturday.

He said the plans could not be disclosed until the other Western partners had been brought into the cnosultations.

COUNTRY HOME

The talks were held at de Gaulle's official country residence in Rambouillet, 30 miles southwest of Paris. Adenauer flew home Saturday night. There was no communique.

It was known, however, de Gaulle and the 84-year-old chancellor discussed a French proposal for setting up a six-nation body to co-ordinate Western Europe's foreign policy.

The six nations, led by France and West Germany, compose the European economic community. Other members are Italy, Belgium, Holland and Luxembourg.

As the Rambouillet talks went on, it was announced that Prime Minister Macmillan has accepted Adenauer's invitation to visit Bonn Aug. 10 for a one-day discussion.

It is no secret that de Gaulle is disappointed at American leadership of the Western camp. His talks with Adenauer sought a means of taking the initiative from Russia. De Gaulle frankly does not expect the United States to do this during the period of the presidential election campaign.

Ethiopia Given Six U.S. Sabres

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia (AP) — The U.S. government has given the Ethiopian air force six F-86F Sabre jet fighters. They were handed over to Emperor Haile Selassie by Joseph Wagner, U.S. charge d'affaires. American technicians were sent along to service the planes and train Ethiopian personnel.

Southam Buys MacLean Publications

TORONTO (CP)—Southam Company Ltd. has acquired Hugh C. MacLean Publications Ltd., the two companies announced jointly Friday.

The purchase price was not disclosed.

Hugh C. MacLean publishes 21 Canadian business and professional magazines and has annual advertising and circulation revenues exceeding $3,000,000.

Southam publishes eight Canadian daily newspapers, owns printing plants in several Canadian centres, and has interests in the radio and television fields.

The MacLean Company (not to be confused with Maclean-Hunter Publishing Co.) will continue to operate as a separate company under present officers and management, with the addition of Southam representatives to the MacLean board.

LABOR MINISTER STARR

Starr's Estimate

$10,000,000 More For Winter Work

OTTAWA (CP) — The recently-announced expansion of the winter works plan will cost the federal government an extra $10,000,000 this winter, Labor Minister Starr estimated yesterday.

This would raise to $25,000,000 from $12,000,000 last winter the total federal outlay for the program, under which Ottawa pays half the payroll costs for approved municipal capital works projects.

Total expenditures by all levels of government on the program last winter was $74,000,000, Mr. Starr said.

He spoke as the house approved a $15,000,000 appropriation for the federal government share in 1960-61—an estimate made before Prime Minister Diefenbaker announced a recent expansion in the plan.

The remaining $10,000,000 would be voted by the Commons as a supplementary estimate at the next regular session of parliament, probably opening next January.

Mr. Starr said extension of unemployment insurance benefits to cover farm workers is being considered by the federal government.

Slaying Prize: $200,000

SEATTLE (AP) — The Times says James B. Lamont of Seattle is the beneficiary of two $100,000 insurance policies on the life of Elmer E. Johnson, business partner beaten to death by Lamont.

Lamont was sentenced to not more than 20 years in prison after pleading guilty of manslaughter.

The Times quoted Lamont as saying he took out the policies, with Johnson's knowledge, so he would have money to operate the business if anything happened to Johnson.

Court action may be necessary to dispose of the policies. State law provides that anyone taking part in "a wilful and unlawful killing" cannot get property of the victim. Lawyers disagree on whether manslaughter is considered a wilful killing.

Invading Reds Promised 'Bloody Nose'

TAIPEI, Formosa (AP)—The Chinese Nationalist navy can expect timely support from the U.S. 7th fleet in case of a large-scale surprise attack by the Chinese Communists, the top American naval adviser in Formosa said Saturday.

Capt. Donald G. Irvine, of the U.S. military assistance advisory group, said "the over-all strength of the free world's naval forces in the Pacific is much superior to the Communist bloc's and the Reds would be given a bloody nose in the event of a showdown."

Job Bias End Urged

JOHANNESBURG, South Afica (Reuters)—The South African Trades Union Council has recommended a national minimum wage of £30 a month and an end to racial job discrimination, it was learned Thursday. The eight-point memorandum to the government-appointed economic advisory council also asked for the right for Negro workers to organize and join trade unions.

Timber Firm's Hopes for Plant 'At Least Encouraging' to City

It is too early to start raising cheers, but it is at least encouraging that MacMillan, Bloedel and Powell River Limited is studying the possibility of putting a new enterprise into the Sidney Roofing and Paper plant on Victoria's Inner Harbor.

Sidney Roofing is now definitely scheduled to close down the remainder of its Victoria operations by Nov. 30, and, by the end of the year, the remaining Sidney Roofing payroll—covering nearly 50 persons — will have moved with the machinery to Burnaby where the company's operations are now being centred.

Because the average dollar value of each ton of Sidney Roofing product is about $140, the freight rate question made the move to Burnaby an economic advantage.

If MacMillan, Bloedel and Powell River can find an end product with a higher ton value, then the chances are that they may locate its manufacture in Victoria.

STOCK BARGAINS SEEN

A Vancouver investment firm thinks that some Canadian top ranking stocks are now selling at low enough prices to be rated as good bargains, even if the bottom of the present market may not yet have been reached.

Pemberton Securities notes that there are many Canadian common stocks which are now trading between 20 and 30 per cent below their highs of June 1957, and which at the same time are earning more today than they did then.

One of these stocks is B.C. Power now selling at $31¼ on earnings of $2.48 a share. Two years ago the stock was selling at $54 with earnings at $2.33 a share.

Looking back Pemberton's agree that 1957 prices were too high in relation to earnings, but it believes that investors may now be overdoing their pessimism as to the future of companies that are leaders in their own fields.

BROKER VISITS USSR

Alex McBain, Victoria manager of Dominion Securities, is going to make sure he does not take a busman's holiday this year.

There will be no business doing where Alex is going, for he is bound for Leningrad and Moscow on a flying visit with his parents.

"There are no publicly-owned bonds or shares in Russia, and I suppose no bond dealers either," he told me as he prepared for his week-end flight to Soviet Russia. "Thus so far as business is concerned it should be complete relaxation."

"BUSINESS IS GOOD"

One city firm, tired of hearing complaint about business activity is issuing each member of its staff a button which says "Business is good with me."

The firm has a good psychological idea. A pessimism complex spreads easily until it becomes a habit.

An official of this firm said that it had made a close scrutiny of local economics and found generally that "sales were more than holding" as compared with a year ago.

"Some people are not satisfied unless they are 10 per cent up on the previous year. They are being too greedy."

Wood Price Tumble Hits Industry

PORTLAND (AP) — A drop in the price of plywood that put it at the lowest point since the Second World War price-control days has threatened to close down much of the U.S. northwest's plywood production.

One lumber wholesaler in Portland, who declined to be named, admitted his firm was buying one-quarter inch, sanded-on-one-side plywood stock at $60 a thousand square feet less 5 per cent.

"It's $60 for the big boys today, and the others are going to have to fight their way down to it," he said.

Major producers in the areas have been listing prices of $64, but have been reported giving discounts of between 3 and 5 per cent.

Prickly Garden Giant

Child 'Captives' Had Love, Care

TECUMSEH, Ont. (CP) —"People have the idea you are monsters. Let them know you're not."

And Mrs. Shirley Dickerson Leach, in hesistant, broken language and amid tears, told why three of her six children were confined in their home 11 years.

"We hid the children when we moved to Windsor from Detroit because no one would rent a house to a couple with six kids.

NOT LIKE OTHERS

"When we bought this house we still kept the children inside. But by then it was because . . . they were not like other children."

The confinement ended on Thursday when 14-year-old Gordon, a pale boy some 47 inches tall, slipped out a back door and told his story to a neighbor. Confined with him had been 18-year-old Connie and 13-year-old Glenda.

Mrs. Leach and her children moved to Windsor following her marriage to the Canadian-born Donald Leach. The children were confined in three different houses after 1949.

She said three older children who led a normal life were outstanding students. But in their years at school they never revealed the secret of their home.

END SILENCE

After prompting from the family lawyer, the parents ended a long silence to talk to newspaper men. Mrs. Leach tearfully described an unhappy first marriage, ended after "12 years of misery" and followed by the confinement.

Parents Tell Story

"The children have never been neglected," she said. "They've never been sick. Once they had chicken pox and another time the measles.

"They've seen doctors and they're not undernourished. We have a freezer full of food. They have clothing, books and television."

She said they were allowed out on summer nights. They had the run of the house.

STILL CONFINED

The three were still confined after the couple bought a house, said Mrs. Leach, because she feared the reaction of neighborhood children to the retarded growth of the three.

Mr. Leach told reporters:

"It's been on our minds; bearing down heavily for a long time. My wife and I have talked and talked for hours these years.

RIDICULED

"In Detroit, the children were ridiculed by their playmates because they were small and slow to develop. We didn't want them to be tortured over here.

"We love our children and always have," he said. "We want the best for them that we can give them."

Salt Lake Steaming Five Weeks

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) —For more than five weeks now, Salt Lake City's high daytime temperatures haven't been out of the 90s —except when they rose into the 100s. It's the longest heat wave on record here.

Last Tuesday's reading of 107 degrees was the highest ever recorded in Salt Lake.

Weary of battling forest fire that threatened historic Lac Le Jeune fishing, hunting and skiing resort near Kamloops, owner John Whitaker said yesterday "the worst is past and all buildings are safe." End to Surpluses Planned by Nixon

CHICAGO (AP) — Vice-President Richard Nixon has aimed at a target date of three to four years to bring the vast farm surpluses under control.

He said a massive long-range program, including indemnity payments to farmers, is needed to turn the trick.

The Republican presidential nominee said past efforts have been too piecemeal. And, he added, that to attack the problem with the same tools used in the past would only "make the stalemate worse" between the administration and the Congress.

He left no doubt that he would come up with a farm program differing in many respects from the policies backed by Secretary of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson—a man who was left out of a conference Nixon held with farm representatives Saturday.

"The farmer didn't create and isn't responsible for the box he's standing in," Nixon said. "The government got him to produce more during the war and now must face up to the responsibility of getting him out of that situation."

Nixon said Benson wasn't invited because of differences in their views on farm problems.

REIMBURSED

Nixon likened the indemnity farm payments to that which the government gave war materials contractors after the war ended. They were reimbursed for the extra expense of doing a rush job on producing munitions.

Both Nixon and his Democratic opponent, Sen. John Kennedy, have called the farm situation the biggest domestic problem facing the nation.

Don't Blame Weather

Junior Eating? He Should Be

If your youngster isn't eating as much in this hot weather, don't blame the weather and don't give the child that excuse.

FAULTY HABITS

Any lack of interest in food on the part of children, Dr. Mahaffy says, is due to faulty eating habits, lack of sufficient exercise, too many between-meal snacks, and the uncontrolled use of cold, high-calorie drinks and food.

Normally, says the doctor, children need no special hot-weather diets; just a normal, well-balanced diet with perhaps extra water — cool, but not cold.

POINTERS

Dr. Mahaffy offers these pointers to parents:

Continue your child's habit of vigorous outdoor activity; even if you don't like hot weather, don't teach them to dislike it.

Give them, cool, not cold drinks; and usually water is best.

'COOLING OFF'

A short "cooling-off" and quiet period before meals may increase the youngster's appetite.

It may be necessary to limit high-calorie foods such as peanut butter and ice cream.

Larger, better-balanced meals may best be served in the evening, as the day cools off.

GOOD HABITS

No matter what the weather, carry on the usual measures and guides for developing good eating habits—and if you've any questions telephone the health department at EV 5-5711, Local 272.

If even all these don't help, consult your physician.

Labor of 13 Years Saved As Fire Stops Short of Resort

By JACK FRY

Forty-year-old John Whitaker breathed a sigh of relief yesterday as he realized his Lac Le Jeune resort, 23 miles south of Kamloops, would not be lost to an uncontrolled forest fire.

Firefighters were unable to hold the blaze in check and it swept down a mountainside, past a ski tow site, to the southern edge of the small lake. The ski tow was dismantled before fire reached the scene.

But flames did not jump the lake and Mr. Whitaker told the Colonist, in a telephone interview last night, that his lodge and cabins are safe. "Another day or two and it should be all right," he said.

Mr. Whitaker, who for the past 13 years has been single-handedly carving resort facilities from jackpine-covered, rugged foothills south of Kamloops, remained there throughout the ordeal although his guests were evacuated Friday.

The quiet resort owner has been plagued by fires. While fighting a forest fire in 1951, his back was broken when he and two other men were crushed under a falling, burning tree.

Despite the fact that it kept him in hospital six weeks and in a body cast for 15 months, when he was able to get around again he climbed onto the seat of a bulldozer and started clearing land and building roads and cabins.

The historic little centre, now a self-contained community, dates back to the 1880s when Father Le Jeune worked with the Chinook Indians and translated the Bible into their language. A log cabin hotel built there in 1885, by a man named David Lusk, is still in use.

Whisky Fur Fetched

WALLINGTON, N.J. (AP) — Sad indeed is the life of the fur factory worker, to hear Henry Admirand tell it.

This was the explanation Admirand gave Friday when Magistrate Louis Schiffman asked why he drank:

"Well, you see, your honor, I work in a fur factory and I have to drink two glasses of whisky every day to loosen the fur that sticks in my throat."

"Have you tried water," asked the magistrate.

"I've tried everything, your honor, but nothing works except whisky," said Admirand.

"Do you take anything else after work besides whisky?" the magistrate inquired.

"Certainly, your honor," said Admirand. "After the whisky loosens the fur, I wash everything down with a large glass of beer."

Magistrate Schiffman dismissed an assault charge Admirand was bringing against another man when a witness testified that Admirand had been drinking and was merely being helped up from the ground.

"I suggest you switch to a mouth wash," said the magistrate.

Too Few Lifejackets Costs Yachtsman $20

John Edward Reitan, 1520 Munro Road, was fined $50 for supplying liquor to minors and an additional $50 for consuming liquor in a public place at the same court yesterday.

Ronald Douglas Churchill, 2859 Prior, aged 19, Reitan's partner in this misadventure also paid $50 for consuming liquor in a public place.

James Hart Lennox, 2004 runnymede was fined $20 for careless driving.

Most Children Swimming At Least a Few Strokes

By MARGIE NAYSMITH

After five weeks of perfect weather, most of the children in the swim classes are swimming a few strokes now. Many of them can travel about 40 feet in the water.

This means that these boys and girls have some idea of breathing in the water — a problem that moved one of the boys to ask:

"Gee — why do we have so much trouble breathing when we do it all the time?"

FEW HOLD BACK

There are always a few who hold back from going in the water at all, and we get quite a kick out of the excuses they give. This year "sunburn" has been worked to death as a reason.

One youngster, red-headed, freckle-faced AND sunburned, used the excuse for two weeks. Mind you, the first week he actually had a burn that backed up his story quite well, and the second week I could still feel sorry for him.

TOLD HIM SO

Last week, though, I had a look at him and decided it would be all right for him to go in, and told him so.

He was a bit put off, but went in and did surprisingly well. I told him so when he came out.

"Yes," he said. "Now I wish I hadn't sat in the sun to get burned. This is lots of fun, isn't it?"

Another boy who'd been having quite a struggle is now swimming quite nicely. His dad came up to me at the microphone and said:

"I'll bet you could never guess why Brian is trying so hard now." I told him I had no idea at all.

It seems that Brian, aged 9, has decided to be a space-ship pilot when he grows up. Some of those space ships will come back down on land, but they might just as well land in water—so Brian feels he'd better know how to swim.

GOOD REASON

That's as good a reason as I could think up. At least, it provided the incentive and Brian is now doing very well.

This next week is Parents' Visiting Week, and we are looking forward to meeting as many parents as possible. We hope we'll have some pleasant surprises for them.

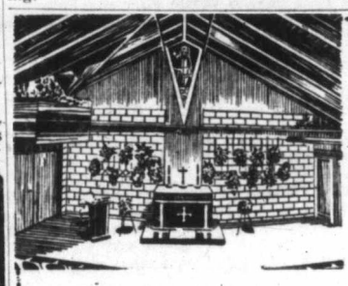

We'll be working on new strokes this week, and will be giving a few tests to children who will be away for their vacations during the last two weeks of the classes.

Altogether, this week will be busy, as well as the usual fun.

Braves Gain on Pittsburgh As Burdette Homers in 11th

Pitcher Lew Burdette slammed his first home run of the season in the top of the 11th inning last night to give Milwaukee Braves an 8-7 victory over Los Angeles Dodgers and move them within two games of Pittsburgh Pirates in the National League.

Burdette had come in for Milwaukee as its fourth pitcher in the ninth inning. He blanked the Dodgers in the ninth and 10th, sent Milwaukee out in front in the 11th, and stopped the Dodgers in the bottom of the inning for his 11th victory of the season.

A total of eight home runs were hit in the game. Del Crandall, Bill Bruton, Felix Mantilla, Joe Adcock and Burdette hit them for the Braves, while Tommy Davis hit two and Frank Howard one, his 17th, for the Dodgers.

BIG CROWD

There were 81,544 fans in Los Angeles Coliseum.

Victory came after the Pirates had been beaten, 6-1, by the Chicago Cubs in a day game featuring the seven-hit pitching of Glen Hobbie. Hobbie rushed his expectant wife to hospital, hurried to the park, and found out midway in the game he was the father of a 6¾-pound boy, their first child. His control was unaffected, as he helped the Cubs snap an eight-game losing streak.

San Francisco Giants, on the move again at last, beat Cincinnati Redlegs, 2-1, on a 10th-inning single by Jim Davenport for their ninth win in 12 games. In the other National League game, Larry Jackson of St. Louis became the league's second 13-game winner as the Cardinals whipped Philadelphia, 6-3.

Chicago White Sox moved back into first place in the American League, beating Washington Senators, 3-2, in 11 innings while New York Yankees were rained out at home against Kansas City.

Billy Pierce, appearing as a relief pitcher for the first time this season, won his 10th game for the Sox with the help of an error by Washington's Reno Bertoia. Luis Aparicio opened the 11th with a double, took third on Nellie Fox' bunt single, and scored when Bertoia bobbled Roy Sievers' ground ball at third base.

Sievers had hit his 19th homer off rookie Don Lee in the sixth, but Washington tied the score in the ninth.

Baltimore Orioles sneaked within 3½ games of the Sox, beating Cleveland Indians, 4-3, on Jim Busby's single with two out in the ninth inning.

Chuck Estrada won his 11th for the Orioles although touched for 10 hits, including Marty Keough's two-run homer in the eighth.

VIEWS of SPORT

By Red Smith

LONDON—Harry Levene said there was this girl he knew from Scotland, a Highland lassie with no interest whatever in fist fighting, though she did admire golf and probably would look kindly on the grand old game of tossing the caber, wherein brawny Highlanders hoist a small telegraph pole and heave it for distance like a javelin.

"Anyhow," Mr. Levene said, "I was telling her what a fine, sweet, modest boy Patterson was and how keen I was to see Floyd win. Evidently it captured her interest, because she sat up until 3.30 a.m. to hear the fight on her wireless.

"Remember the good right hand Ingemar landed in the second round? Well, this girl was listening and she rocked back like Patterson when the punch landed—and ricked her neck. She's still taking treatments from a doctor."

Which seems to prove rather conclusively that the Hammer of Thor hasn't lost all its destructive force, after all. To be sure, the blow had no visible effect on Patterson except to make him cautious for about a minute, but a man who can throw a punch in the Polo Grounds and give a lady a pain in the neck 3,000 miles away, he's still a belter to be reckoned with. Of course, the captious might reply that the dimpled beast of prey from Goteburg had always been noted more as a lady-killer than a man-eater.

One-Punch Fighter

"In my judgment," Mr. Levene said, "Johansson brought off a monumental fraud on the boxing public. He is a one-punch fighter with nothing but that right hand. In the first bout he caught Floyd with a lucky punch and then didn't know how to finish him. But didn't he have a wizard year for himself as champion?"

Harry Levene's opinions in this area should be taken with reservations, for he is not an unbiased observer and doesn't pretend to be. He promotes fights in London in bitter competition with his former fishmonger who has had diplomatic relations with Jim Norris and Madison Square Garden. In the eyes of Cus D'Amato, Patterson's knightly proprietor, this automatically establishes Solomons as an obsolete haddock and Levene as the cuddliest nobleman of the realm.

As a result of the Levene-D'Amato entente, any business that Patterson might do in Great Britain as champion would be handled by Harry. Though Floyd takes a dim view of the Wright brothers' experiments at Kittyhawk, he has consented to fly to Sweden Aug. 8 for 10 exhibitions in Johansson's homeland and Norway. D'Amato, who lumps Lindbergh in the same barrel with Norris, will follow by ship and then he and Floyd will visit London, Paris, and Rome.

Here they will be guests of Levene, whose dream is to promote a heavyweight championship match and he doesn't care where.

"I've been in this business more than 40 years," Levene said. "As a kid in the East End I won the championship of London at six-stone-ten (94 pounds), and had my nose broken and never had it fixed. As a manager I was with Jock McAvoy—he had polio, by the way, but still is a powerful man from the waist up and doing well with a caravan camp, what you'd call a trailer park—and I was with Jackie Kid Berg and Ted Kid Lewis and any number of others.

He Whipped Carnera

"I've never promoted a heavyweight championship, although once—well, it was back when Jack Sharkey was champion. I had Larry Gains, a big Canadian who came over on a cattle boat and knocked out national champions all over the continent. He gave Primo Carnera his first whipping in England, at the White City before 60,000 people.

"Jimmy Johnston, who was promoting in New York then, invited us over to fight Ernie Schaaf and then Sharkey. I demanded a guarantee, percentage, and steamship tickets, and Jimmy wired, 'God never guarantees.' I didn't think we'd get any the best of it and we were doing all right here. So Carnera fought Schaaf, who died after the bout, and then Primo got Sharkey and the championship."

This was over tea and scones. Wistfully, Mr. Levene polished off a cherry tart and departed. Later that evening, a little before closing time, there was some small boxing talk with the innkeeper of the Duke of Albemarle, an ancient and charming Mayfair pub.

"Just a moment," the innkeeper said when some question of fact arose, and from under the bar he brought Nat Fleischer's "Ring Record Book." Proudly he displayed the flyleaf, with a personal inscription from the author.

So Nat Fleischer was here, too. It happens everywhere—in Fiji, Tasmania, Bangkok, and the Duke of Albemarle. What ever happened to Kilroy?

Nanaimo Trims Victoria; Last Hope Finally Gone

NANAIMO (Special)—Sticking strictly to lacrosse and playing it as well as they have all season, Nanaimo's veterans powered their way into the Inter-City Lacrosse League playoffs here last night with a 20-13 victory over Victoria.

Next game, Tuesday: VICTORIA at Vancouver.

Beaten, 14-10, in a brawling, penalty-ridden game Wednesday in Victoria, Nanaimo left no doubt last night that they intended to settle the playoff question once and for all. After giving up the first goal to Tom Collett, Nanaimo piled up a 9-2 lead and finished with the highest goal total of any team this season.

HARD CORE

And it was the hard core of "tough guys" who battered Vics on Wednesday that outplayed them last night. Skip MacKay had two goals and four assists; Tom McVie had three goals and two assists; Don Ashbee had four goals (he now has 48 for the season) and Jack Blonda three goals and two assists to bring his league-leading total to 63-45—108. Don Sherry, another of the veterans, chipped in with three goals, and Arnie Dugan had a goal and five assists.

Stu Smith, Ron Jay, Whitey Severson, Doug Flynn and Tom Collett each scored twice for Victoria.

Fred Fulla broke Vics in the early stages, kicking out five ticketed shots in the first quarter after Vics had gone ahead, 1-0. Meanwhile, Nanaimo poured 14 shots at Geordie Johnston, Ashbee got three goals and Sherry two to make it 5-1 and pull the club out of reach.

After the whirlwind first half, with Nanaimo ahead by seven goals, the game broke wide open. Both clubs payed little attention to defence, and scored 11 goals apiece in the next 30 minutes. Four of Victoria's goals came on power plays, but Nanaimo practically nullified that by scoring twice while shorthanded.

Johnston, a standout, had to block 40 shots compared to 29 for Fulla. Chummy Crabbe played most of the final quarter for Nanaimo and stopped eight shots.

Rough play also took over in the last quarter, when Ashbee and Tom English of Victoria had a slugfest that ended with Ashbee throwing English' gloves high into the stands.

For Victoria, there remains just two games with Vancouver. Vics finish their season at home Wednesday, "Trophy Night" at Memorial Arena.

Russia Predicts Olympic Victory

MOSCOW (AP)—The deputy chairman of the Soviet Olympic committee Saturday predicted Russia would come out on top in the Rome Olympics.

"If you ask me why, I must say it is because I want to win," said A. S. Peslyak, the deputy chairman. "I do not underestimate the strength of the United States team which is unquestionable.

"The American team is very strong, but it will have rivalry from our team. If there were no joint (East and West) German team, Americans would sleep better.

"And we had better not forget the Australians, British and the Scandinavians."

Peslyak predicted a series of record-breaking performances at Rome. He said the Russians were very eager to go to Rome in order to compete against top athletes and to renew their friendships with foreign friends.

Gene Littler Beats Rain, Holds Lead

BALTIMORE (AP) — Gene Littler of Singing Hills, Calif., slogged his way to a one-over-par 73 Saturday in the backwash of tropical storm Brenda and still managed to hold doggedly to a one-stroke lead through three rounds of the Eastern Open golf tournament.

Littler's 54-hole total of 206 was a step ahead of Al Besselink of Grossinger, N.Y.; Frank Boynton of Orlando, Fla., and Jackie Burke of Kiamesha, N.Y.

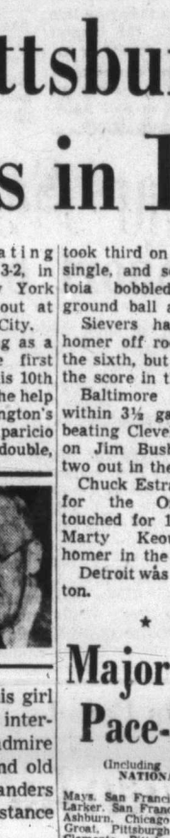

The trio pulled up behind Littler by breaking the suddenly tough par of Pine Ridge. Burke and Besselink each shot 71 and Boynton had 70.

The final round of the tourney for $25,000 in awards will be played today by the 60 pros who scored 220 or less. Among those who failed to make the cut was Dave Ragan, the defending champion from Orlando, with 222.

City Colts In Final

RICHLAND (AP) — Bill McAdams tossed a four-hitter at the Blue Mountain team Saturday night, as his Victoria mates drubbed the Walla Walla and Pendleton players 12-0 in the Colt League District playoffs.

That put the Canadians in the Sunday afternoon championship game with Tri-Cities, the same team that beat them 13-3 Friday night. If Victoria wins the game, a second will be played to determine the district representative in the regional tournament at Pocatello, Idaho.

Bob Mawle, last week's main event winner, finished second, followed by Doug Bowle. Two collisions marred the race, the first between Al Smith and Dave Cooper; the second between Gil Philardi and Smith, who were both knocked out of the running.

Six City Greens Busy

Island Lawn Bowling Attracts 250 Entrants

About 250 lawn bowlers will converge on the six city greens this week in the 33rd annual Vancouver Island tournament.

Included in the field, which begins play tomorrow in men's and women's singles, women's doubles and men's rinks, will be defending champions in six of the seven major events.

Dave Warner of Canadian Pacific defends the men's rinks title and the Fort Garry Cup. Bill Bennett and Sam Caffyn of New Westminster have returned in defence of the F. S. Martin Cup for men's doubles, and Hector Tapp of Victoria Lawn Bowling Club will be out to retain men's singles honors and the W. H. Cullin Trophy.

Mainland bowlers hold all the women's titles. Mrs. C. C. Donovan of Vancouver Terminal, holder of the James McMartin Cup, is singles champion, and Mrs. A. Chambers and Lily Bennett of New Westminster hold the W. and J. Wilson Cup as doubles champions.

Three members of last year's championship rink, are also entered, but on separate teams. Sam Caffyn's New Westminster rink has returned to defend the mixed rinks title.

Competition continues throughout the week and concludes Saturday. First draws follow, and others will appear in Tuesday's Colonist.

Speaking Briefly

Norton Nips Jerome In Olympic Practice

Vancouver's Harry Jerome was beaten by Ray Norton in a United States States Olympic Games team practice in Eugene, Ore., yesterday in the 100-metre dash, but the finish was so close that both were clocked at 10.4 seconds.

Jerome, who tied the unofficial record of 10 seconds flat for the distance in the Canadian trials, had beaten Norton in their only previous meeting, in the 200-metre sprint. But in yesterday's rematch at that distance, Stone Johnson of Dallas whipped them both. His time was 20.9, followed by Norton at 21.0 and Jerome in 21.1.

In one of the meet's other highlights, John Thomas jumped seven feet, the 30th successive meet in which he has cleared the height.

FORT ERIE, Ont. (CP) — A double dead-heat — a racing rarity — occurred recently in the eighth race at the Fort Erie Jockey Club.

The placing judges could find no separation between Rube's Ace and Bernie Kline in the photo of the first-place finishers, and when they turned to the photo of the next two horses, Sandy Sugar and Flotilla, found another dead heat for third place.

James Bay in Final Against Lake Hill

DUNCAN (Special) — Two fine pitching performances carried Victoria's James Bay and Lake Hill all-star clubs into today's sudden-death Vancouver Island Little League baseball final.

James Bay beat the American League all-stars of Victoria, 4-0, and Lake Hill downed Duncan, 4-1, in yesterday's opening games. The two losers play a consolation game today at 1 p.m., with the final set for 3 p.m. Winner advances to the B.C. final in New Westminster next weekend.

Cliff Thorburn, who has tossed two no-hitters in the James Bay League this season, held the American all-stars to two hits while striking out 10, and also contributed a two-run single in the third inning.

Bill Billsbrough was almost as stingy for Lake Hill, holding Duncan to three hits. Brian Smith provided all the power that was needed with a two-run homer in the fourth inning that broke a scoreless tie.

Japanese Taking to Travel

Not Sightseeing, But Any Excuse Will Do

TOKYO (Reuters) — More Japanese will be travelling the world than ever before this year.

The number of passports issued is roughly estimated to have increased from 24,000 in 1955 to 42,000 in 1959. The figure for 1960 will probably be more than 60,000, with an immediate increase predicted by officials and tourist agencies for the next few weeks.

Because of Japan's geographical position, those of her people who can afford to travel are inclined to plan big tours across the globe.

There has been a rush of applications for passports to visit Rome for this summer's Olympic Games. Small shop owners, dealers in sports equipment and many others are especially interested in making the journey in order to gain experience for their own Olympics in Tokyo in 1964.

A plan has been announced, subject to approval by the Japanese government, to send 300 Japanese businessmen and local councillors touring the Soviet Union this summer.

The Japanese government has eased various restrictions on overseas travelling. While trips for purely sight-seeing purposes are still banned, the finance ministry has indicated that permission will be granted if they are combined with business or attendance at international conferences.

Officials say that other restrictions, too, will be relaxed.

Plot Thickens

Paris in the summer is no time for a leggy young Parisienne to become a bookworm. In the Tuileries Gardens, this mademoiselle grimly concentrates on her novel and ignores the two kibitzers who have suddenly become avid readers.

BARBADOS — If you meet a donkey cart coming toward you on the left side of the road on this Caribbean island, don't think the animal has a stubborn streak.

All traffic in Barbados, including 25,000 bicycle riders and 3,000 animal-drawn vehicles as well as cars and motorcycles travels on the left side.

Caribbean Resorts

Tropical Holidays Cheap in Off-Season

JAMAICA — Tropical island holidays in Caribbean millionaire resorts are now available at budget prices for the average tourist.

By visiting such places as Bermuda, Montego Bay in Jamaica and Nassau in the Bahamas during the "off" season, a budget-conscious traveller can take advantage of special low rates.

Hotels and inns which are by-words with world travellers, such as the Myrtle Bank and the Montego Beach in Jamaica, the Castle Harbour in Bermuda or the Emerald Beach in Nassau, offer special summer rates to Canadian visitors.

These famous inns have rates somewhat higher than those available to the traveller who is on a strict budget, but they are still bargains by Canadian standards.

FINEST BEACHES

The Caribbean islands offer deep-sea fishing, tennis, golf, sailing, skin-diving, conducted tours, yachting trips and swimming on some of the finest beaches in the world or in private pools.

And there are native villages and bazaars, the latter offering an opportunity to pick up colorful souvenirs at low prices.

Every Varied Corner

Sunny Spain Booms As Lure for Tourists

By ERNEST WAENGLER

MADRID (TNS) — Nowhere in Europe is the change in tourism as evident as in Spain.

A few years ago, only a few relatively small areas attracted visitors from other countries in sizable numbers: the Balearic Islands, the Costa Brava and, to a lesser degree, the Madrid region and Andalusia in the south.

Today, every corner of Spain, from the windswept rocks on the Atlantic coast and the jagged mountain peaks of Castile to the sun-drenched beaches around Malaga, has become a tourist paradise that competes with Europe's most famous resorts.

ORANGES, OLIVES

This year, tourism will provide Spain with more revenue than oranges and olives, traditionally the most important export commodities.

In the past 10 years, Spain has built more hotels than any other European country. At least 50 more are now under construction.

Three factors have contributed to the boom: The natural advantages of climate and scenery, motorization and prices.

SUNNIEST

With the exception of a few areas, Spain is the sunniest country in Europe. It has beaches where swimming and sunbathing go on for 10 months of the year. Lack of rain, the perpetual scourge of the Spanish farmer, is the chief asset of the Spanish resort operator.

No other country of comparable size can boast a similar variety of landscape. There are tropical palm groves and Alpine pine forests, snow capped mountains and arid plains, golden sand beaches and Nordic fjords to chose from, all within less than a day's driving from Madrid.

CULTURAL TREASURE

Interspersed among these are some of the world's rarest cultural treasures. The museums and art galleries are probably the best anywhere. Proud relics from the Moorish past, vast, dim cathedrals from the Middle Ages, picturesque villages with steep, cobbled streets, and ancient walled cities where time has stood still for eight centuries can be visited along the highways in almost every part of the country.

RENTED CARS

Automobiles, with or without driver, can be rented at all major centres. For the budget-minded, there is an infinite variety of all-expense tours throughout Spain, all with expert guides and first class accommodation at stopovers.

A single room with bath at a luxury hotel that satisfies the most extravagant taste rarely costs more than $5 a night. At a clean, attractive hotel of lesser magnificence it can be had for half as much.

Nor are the bargains restricted to hotel rooms. For about $1.50, the visitor can feast on fresh lobster, suckling pig and steak in an atmosphere of picturesque elegance and on considerably less than $1 in plainer style. A bottle of good wine adds no more than a few cents to the bill.

TAXIS CHEAP

A taxi ride halway through Madrid costs less than 50 cents, a 200-mile trip in a comfortable bus about $4, and a quart of the best Spanish brandy a little more than $1.

Coney Island Marking 75 Years

NEW YORK — Coney Island, one of the world's best-known amusement parks, is 75 years old.

Things have changed since Diamond Jim Brady and Lillian Russell used to dine there and Harry Houdini performed spectacular escape tricks. There are new rides, new games of chance, new entertainment creations.

Coney's lifeblood has always been its atmosphere, and on Aug. 13, they're going to celebrate the birthday with all the razzamatazz Coney is famous for.

Pasta Is Foundation

Italians Take Pride In Their Cuisine

ROME—Italians take a great pride in their cuisine.

The first food a visitor should develop a taste for is the Italian staff of life, pasta, which is made of hard wheat, water, milk and eggs. It is made into such varieties as spaghetti, macaroni, ravioli, lasagne and cannelloni.

VARIED SHAPES

Different kinds are distinguished by their shapes. Spaghetti and macaroni are tubular, lasagne is flat and cannelloni is rolled up with meat in the middle.

One of the most delicious form of pasta is cannelloni which should contain a light, creamy, spiced hash inside, and which should melt in your mouth. The whole thing should be covered with a thick, creamy cheese and sauce.

CLAMS, BACON

There are other forms of pasta that you must try, such as spaghetti alle vongole, with little clams, and alla carbonara, with eggs and bacon.

But there are other things besides pasta. A delicious soup is the well-known minestrone, either al risotto (with rice) or alle verdure (with vegetables), and an even better-tasting one is the stracciatella alla Romana, a thin, clear soup like consomme with an egg beaten up in it and cheese on top.

MODEST PLACES

One of the best places for tourists with a modest amount of money to spend is the trattorie, an eating place with simple decor, plain tables without flowers, a bare floor and often a cat roaming around, but with gleaming tablecloths and delicious food, and where you will find yourself mostly surrounded by Romans — rather than tourists—always a sign that the food is good.

BIG MEAL

Romans normally eat little for breakfast, just coffee, with milk, and a roll or two. Their big meal is at noon when everyone goes home. Offices, shops and some museums close between one and four. They have lunch, slowly savoring the food and wine, and then they sleep.

Flowers, Grottoes, Fountains

Kashmir Glimpse of Heaven In Valley of North India

SRINAGAR, India — Poets have seen in the north Indian state of Kashmir a glimpse of heaven, extolling the beauty of her bright flowers, temples, grottoes and clear fountains.

The vast gardens of trees, flowers and lakes of this valley, only eight miles long and 20 to 25 miles wide, are separated from the rest of India by the Pir Panjal mountain range and from Tibet and China by the Himalayas.

WHIRLING ACTIVITY

Srinagar, the capital city, is built along the banks of the Jhelum River and on the edge of Dal Lake. It is a city of whirling activity.

Men in squat, fur hats and women in dark-colored "tent" robes and flashing jewelry walk along bustling streets. Old men in turbans sit on the busy sidewalks smoking strange-looking hookahs.

MARBLE, LAUNDRY

Hundreds of brown houses line the river. They are touched with the color of blue, green and yellow flower pots, painted shutters and inlaid marble arches that rise like eyebrows over the small windows. And on roofs, balconies, stairs and window sills can be seen clothes hanging to dry in the sun.

Indian-style gondolas called "shikaras" thread their way among huge work boats hauling timber up and down the crowded river, and elegantly-fitted houseboats are anchored in Dal Lake.

LUXURY CRAFT

The houseboats, ranging in length from 80 to 125 feet and which can be rented along with four servants for about $5 a day, have two and three bedrooms as well as spacious dining and living rooms, a front porch with cushioned side seats and a roof garden with garden furniture and rows of potted geraniums.

Aside from cruising on the lake, swimming, visiting the city or the nearby Mogul gardens, visitors can take side trips up the nearby mountainsides.

Shoemakers, Vendors

Glimpses of Indian Life Abound in Old Madras

MADRAS, India — Whether one walks or drives down the streets in this city, third largest in India, he will see intimate glimpses of life.

GARLAND-MAKERS

Beautiful, brown-skinned girls sit in a circle on the sidewalk selling tropical "jack" fruit. Garland-makers talk quietly among themselves as they choose the next bloom to be added to their string of flowers.

At a public market, shoppers fill their baskets with mangoes and tropical fruit, then place the baskets on their heads and wander off.

OLD TEMPLES

The city itself offers unusual Oriental architectural designs in its temples and old buildings where the interested visitor can while away many interesting hours.

Thirty-seven miles outside the city is the ancient seaport of Mahabalipuam, today a quiet fishing village, where monolithic monuments hewn from granite, and other sculptures are seen at a site sometimes known as the Seven Pagodas.

Pupils began hewing and sculpting from hard rock for the first time during the Pallava Dynasty, from the sixth to ninth centuries. Previously, they worked with soft rock and brick.

Obey Police Reds Told

MOSCOW (AP) — Moscow residents have been told they should obey and respect policemen. The newspaper Evening Moscow set out that view in an article, that said many parents are guilty of making bogeymen of police to frighten children, a practice that frequently causes bad feeling and mistrust.

Spain Denies Israeli Ties

AMMAN, Jordan (AP)—The Spanish Embassy insisted Saturday Spain will not recognize Israel. In an official statement, the embassy denied press reports saying an exchange of diplomatic representation at embassy level between Spain and Israel was imminent.

Michigan Museums

Centuries of History Shown in Antiques

DEARBORN, Mich.—A million visitors flock here each year to see three centuries of American history portrayed in antiques displayed at the Henry Ford Museum and Greenfield Village.

An historical cross-section of America is preserved in the 200 acres of exhibits ranging from candlemaking to locomotives. You can see the stately Connecticut mansion where Noah Webster compiled his first dictionary; Logan County Courthouse, where young Abe Lincoln first practised law in Illinois, and Thomas Edison's laboratory from Menlo Park, New Jersey.

REAL THING

The buildings and objects on display are not reproductions; all were carefully moved from their original sites, including a bicycle shop from Dayton, Ohio, where the Wright brothers made and tested parts for their first flying machine. It almost seems as if Orville and Wilbur were out to lunch.

Holland

People Chief Appeal

AMSTERDAM, Holland — The friendliness and helpfulness of the Dutch seem to be outstanding qualities which attract American visitors to Holland.

The sights peculiar to Holland, a land carved from the sea, are interesting enough, but a personal encounter with the people of the land and the knowledge that you are welcome are considered of higher value by most tourists.

This personal contact is easily achieved in each city or town through a local tourist office known as the VVV, and pronounced Vay Vay Vay.

Here, in addition to obtaining information about where to go and what to see locally and nationally, a visitor can arrange through the VVV staff to be introduced to a Dutch family or to meet someone of similar interests, such as a lawyer meeting lawyer or a teacher meeting teacher.

To make a visit to Holland a pleasant and memorable one rather than a rushed and soon-forgotten one, the visitor is advised to get in touch with the VVV, which will see that he gets a chance to meet the Dutch.

Square Always Filled

ROME, Italy — St. Peter's Square is a familiar sight even to those who have never visited Italy and the State of the Vatican.

Every day of the year the square is filled with visitors photographing the fountains, the facade of the basilica and the colonnade. Here you will probably see more priests than you have ever seen anywhere.

In St. Peter's are seen the great works of Michelangelo, Bernini, Raphael and countless others. Its historical interest lies in that the present church is built on top of one built by Constantine in the fifth century which in turn was built on a street of Roman tombs.

Ocean Under Glass

HAMILTON, Bermuda — Through a glass-bottomed boat making daily cruises to the famous "sea garden" a few miles from Hamilton, visitors can see for themselves scarlet and green sponges, willowy sead rods and huge chunks of live coral called "brain-stones."

Canvas deck chairs are placed around a 12-by-three foot glass well in the centre of the 37-foot boat fitted out with a bright canopy overhead.

Once over the sea gardens, the boat is anchored and a member of the crew dons diving equipment, plunges over the side and beneath the boat displays sea fans, sponges and brain coral to his audience.

England Running Out of Land? Not Yet—But Prices Sky-High

Trouble Is Caused by Good Times

LONDON—Canadians have long wondered how so many people could live on such a tight little island. Now the Englishmen themselves are wondering—and worrying.

Much of the fuss was started by the builders and the architects who, to oversimplify their case unfairly, had become afraid that land prices were becoming so inflated that there would be no money left for their services.

ASTOUNDING

They quoted astounding figures: $22,400, $28,000 and $42,000 an acre had been paid for residential land near just moderately prosperous industrial towns. Average values of building land, it was estimated, had jumped three or four times in the past five years.

What really got the public excited were the front page stories in the newspapers that $700,000 was being paid for less than an acre of land near the centre of the town of Luton.

RUNNING OUT?

"Are we running out of land to build on?" people wanted to know. No, said most of the experts, not too reassuringly. The high cost of land is due to a scarcity not so much of land, but of land where people want to live.

The estates correspondent of The Times was able to point out "the not always readily apparent" causes for the enormous pressure of the demand for houses. There was the natural population growth which had exceeded all estimates: 45,000,000 people now in England and Wales; 3,000,000 more expected in the next 15 years.

Furthermore, more and more people were congregating in the southeast and the Midlands.

MORE HOUSEHOLDS

Still more important was the proliferation of households at a rate unforeseen by the planners. Because there were fewer people living in each dwelling, the population density of many residential areas had declined by 10 per cent in less than 10 years.

In other words there was a housing shortage because times were good; because people had more money, they quite naturally demanded more living space. A severe economic setback would solve the problem overnight.

GREEN BELTS

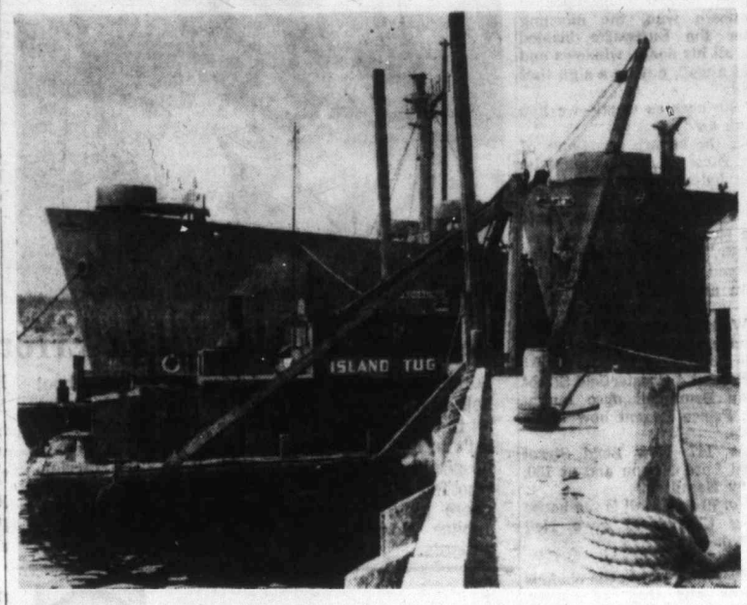

Green belts, introduced under the Town and Country Planning Act of 1947, had been extended to cover about six per cent of the land in England and Wales by the end of last year. As a successful method of restricting growth of large built-up areas, preventing the merging of neighboring towns, and preserving a town's special character, they have won a wide measure of popularity.

PRESENT USE

A green belt is seldom an area of green parkland, as the name might imply to the foreigner. The principle is to keep the land for its present use, which is usually agriculture. Large-scale building which would turn an area into a dormitory for city workers is forbidden, but residential developments may be allowed on "fringe" sites where communities are already established.

WHOLE COUNTY

At present only the 919-square-mile Metropolitan Green Belt around London has been officially confirmed by the government. But proposals from local planning authorities to set up green belts or extend ones already provisionally approved come to Whitehall by the dozens. Surrey, for instance, is attempting to earmark the whole county as an area where no new development can be allowed.

Liberty Ships Ready for Tandem Tow

Courthouse Bids Called

Hydro Building For City Hall?

The B.C. Hydro building at Blanshard and Burdett may be offered for sale to Victoria as a new city hall.

If it is, city officials said yesterday, its size is just about right, and its location offers advantages. But the city might have to compete for it with the provincial government, which also needs more space.

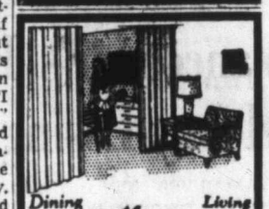

B.C. Hydro officials refused to comment on a report that they are actively considering selling the building and constructing a new and larger head office in Saanich, to provide space for expansion and to reunite the headquarters staff, now divided between the building on Blanshard and the Weiler Building on Government.

So did Reeve George Chatterton, when he was asked if he had been approached about a possible Saanich site. But his answer seemed as much an explanation as a refusal: "I can not make any comment."

Mayor Percy Scurrah said he had received no communications about possible sale of the B.C. Hydro building to the city. But one alderman said he had heard rumors and had been asked what he thought of buying it, "and it's in a good location, where a civic and government centre has been proposed, and would take city hall out of a valuable commercial area."

City Engineer James Garnett estimated its floor area at 40,000 square feet. His department has had 45,000 square feet in mind as the space desirable in a new city hall.

Betting Shops Legal in U.K.

LONDON (Reuters)—Over-the-counter cash betting on horse racing was written into law Friday when royal assent was given to a bill previously passed by both Houses of Parliament. The bill provides for legalized betting shops, which are expected to start operating in May, 1961. The law is aimed at stamping out illegal street betting.

Today's Home-Made Furniture Tomorrow's Shaky Antiques

By GORDON DONALDSON

In a century or so, when wooden furniture is a thing of the past (the forests having been blasted to bits) and what is left of civilization is relaxing on exotic seats made of adjustable nuclear rays, there will be some fascinating items in the antique shops.

These will be the bits of furniture hacked out by today's do-it-yourself artists. They will be very expensive, very wobbly and their great charm will be that you can see the workmanship.

"Look!" the gushing lady of the future will cry, "see that lovely old mitre joint that doesn't fit. And there's the mark where the saw slipped, with a tiny little old bloodstain beside it. You can just imagine the old craftsman hopping about and howling in Early Canadian . . ."

Shop-made furniture will be in far less demand. It lacks character, even today, because character implies blemishes and the professionals are too good at covering them up.

(I still remember a boat I rebuilt years ago. That had character all right. The holes in the roof were patched with plaster and the first time it rained the stuff snowed down in white blobs, blighting my fiancee's hair—and my life.)

Always Room for TV Set —Never Enough for Books

By BETTIE BRADLEY

We can always find house room for the television set. But it is remarkable how many excuses we find for not collecting, reading and housing books.

Even large, expensive homes today will build a den, a games room—even a swimming pool—but never a library. In fact, who can even remember when every self-respecting town house had its own library?

Perhaps your home or apartment really can't accommodate orthodox bookcases. Nevertheless, there are any number of clever and simple ways to make books a part of your decoration.

If your living room is overcrowded, take a good look at the other rooms. A bedroom, even a kitchen, might have a suitable spot.

One modern method of building your own shelves is by using long, spring-loaded metal poles from floor to ceiling. Open shelves fit on the poles and, because the brackets are adjustable, you can have as many shelves as you please and at the height you prefer.

Place the poles so the shelves will be flat against the wall or, if you prefer, run a series at right angles to the wall for an economical and attractive room-divider.

There are several types of open shelving on the market that do not require cabinets and can be attached directly to the wall. For instance, long metal strips attach to the wall with brackets that support the shelving. With these wide brackets your shelves can be made of wood, metal, glass or plastic.

In the recreation room, ordinary concrete building blocks can be used to support shelving. Place three on the floor, about 30" apart, and lay the shelving across the top. Then continue alternating the blocks and shelving to the height you require.

When building open shelves, be sure you give the shelving enough support so there will be no sag. For ¾-inch plywood you need support every 36 inches.

When your project is completed, there will almost certainly be a paucity of books. Use the books you have and then dot the remaining shelves with vases, decorative glassware and other ornaments. Gradually the books will take over.

Oak Loopers at Worst DDT Can Help a Bit

Oak trees in Saanich, especially in the Christmas Hill area, that have been attacked this year by the hungry looper moth, are currently looking very sorry—but if it's any consolation to landowners the situation is now about at its worst.

The loopers spread visual havoc by munching their way systematically through all the leaves on the oak trees they infest.

Next comes the egg-laying stage. Then weather, disease and other factors will determine whether the loopers will reappear in any numbers next year.

Slopes of Christmas Hill, north of McKenzie Avenue between Quadra and Douglas, seem to be the only place of any great infestation, Mr. Lejeune said.

He added that control of the moth is possible to a degree by spraying with DDT mixed with water—NOT with oil.

Greatest City In the World

By EDDY GILMORE

LONDON (AP) — I don't like London. I love it. It's the greatest city in the world.

London lacks the brilliance of Paris . . . the gaiety of pre-war Vienna . . . the once stab-beauty of Budapest . . . the majesty of Rome . . . the crumbling grandeur of Athens . . .

But there's an elegance and satisfaction about it that lingers like vintage wine on the palate of the heart.

London's sooty streets are like yellow pages of time and the Thames is liquid history.

Hundreds of houses still standing remind you of the thousands of fascinating people who've lived here, and those who live here now; The statesmen and soldiers, sailors and pirates, artists, composers, writers, poets and actors, world-builders, financiers, the great beauties, the Cockneys, the wonderful eccentrics. In short, the Londoner.

Vintage Wine Of Heart

The tobacco shopkeeper of Lambeth who, the morning after the Luftwaffe blasted out all his doors, windows and half a wall, put up a sign that read:

"Business as usual—we like fresh air."

Or the superb arrogance of the Duke of Wellington who was halted by a stranger at a Mayfair ball.

"Mr. Smith, I believe," said the stranger.

"Sir," replied the Iron Duke, "if you believe that you'll believe anything."

Walk the streets and history rumbles behind the walls beside you.

No. 79 Pall Mall is the house King Charles II gave Nell Gwyn.

Everyone knows the obvious places—and they, of course, make London—but other corners contribute, too.

In Bayswater stands London's smallest house — the frontage is three feet, six inches.

Hard by Victoria Gate into Hyde Park lies a plot of ground that is a cemetery for dogs, cats and birds.

Over at St. Botolph's in Aldgate you can find the mummified head of Lady Jane Grey's father, the Duke of Suffolk.

What city has a "season" like London's?

It begins in early May with the private view of the Royal Academy's annual show.

This is followed by a gay pageantry of events, unrivalled in scope and magnificence by any other city.

A long, never-ending procession of places to see. Places where things have happened, a great many of them horrible, but a part of London's history.

The Houses of Parliament . . . Westminster Abbey . . . the Tower of London . . . Covent Garden with its first production of "The Messiah" with Handel as conductor in 1741 . . . the National Gallery . . . Buckingham Palace . . . Windsor Palace . . . Clarence House . . . the Old Bailey . . . the Inns of Court.

There are good reasons for complaint about London's drinking laws, but maybe you couldn't have pubs without them.

Dirty Dick's in Bishopsgate.

Johnson's Cheshire Cheese on Fleet Street.

The Intrepid Fox on Wardour Street.

The Prospect of Whitby in Wapping Wall.

High on the list of things to recommend London is the Briton's tenacious admiration for the underdog, his inborn passion for fair play, his natural courtesy, his charming, unconscious and almost naive patriotism.

No city's citizen can laugh at himself so well as a Londoner. In fact, a part of the British character is that ability to poke fun at himself and his institutions.

BUT—and this is a big three-letter word—no fun at the royal family, please—at least from a foreigner.

Vancouver's Festival Money-Losing Success

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Vancouver International Festival is well on its way to a smash success with booming box office sales, sellouts and customers clamoring for seats.

But despite soaring box office sales the festival is budgeting for a deficit, which will likely be made up through $150,000 in public contributions.

Box office sales up to Friday were $190,000, with "Madam Butterfly," Glenn Gould and the New York Philharmonic sold out. Total sales are expected to reach $264,000.

The provincial government, however, is expected to be the only profit-taker—about $20,000 in amusement taxes. The festival has budgeted for a loss of about $110,000.

Hospitals Put Extra Effort into Cheering Young Summer Patients

Summer time is a wonderful for most kids—school holidays, swimming, picnics and just soaking up all that hot sun. But for some youngsters summer isn't so hot at all, especially if they have to lie in a hospital bed like John Overholt, 9, of 3211 Harriet, who fell off his bike and broke his arm recently. These pictures were taken at St. Joseph's, but Jubilee Hospital also has a number of young patients. Hospital staff such as Miss E. Walther, head nurse at St. Joseph's children's ward, are unsparing in their efforts to make their young patients as happy as possible under the circumstances. "Both of us are getting well nicely, thank you," says Janice McDougall, 9, of 189 Crease. She was hit by a car while playing at the beginning of June. With her doll as a constant and loyal companion, she is looking forward to the day when she can be discharged—and dreams of the fun she'll have next summer. Meanwhile, life isn't so bad.—(Ryan Bros. photos.)

LET'S TALK

By Rudolf Flesch

A few days ago I wrote about our darling Indonesian exchange student Lien who has now left us and will soon be back home in Bandung. The day after she left, the oldest of our six children, my daughter Anne, left for a six-week bike trip through New England and Canada.

During the week that followed that sudden double departure, my wife and I said to each other innumerable times, "It's funny how empty the house seems with only five children left."

You see—those of you who have less numerous offspring — there's something about a large family that goes way beyond sheer numbers. The whole feeling of the household is different. The richness of daily life rises in geometric progression whenever a new baby arrives on the scene.

Just My Sister

In my own family there were just my sister and I; in my wife's family there were three—she, her sister and her brother. So both of us just didn't know about the kind of family life we were getting into when we went on to have four children, and then five, and then six. Now we have five girls — ranging from 17 years to eight months — and one boy, 15. We live in a different world from practically all our neighbors and friends.

Since last fall—counting in our "seventh child," Lien — we've had one birth in the family, one christening, four birthday parties, one high school graduation, plus assorted parties at our house with wildly different age levels and distributions of sexes; 24 report cards brought home with 24 different sets of triumphs and setbacks; assorted illnesses — none major, thank God — plus all kinds of tummy aches, bruised knees, minor accidents, Monday - morning fake headaches, allergies, sinus troubles, teeth pulled, etc., dozens of friends' birthday parties, each with a present to take along; one college-admission interview; one purchase of a new baby carriage; several dozens (it seems) pairs of new shoes; the baby saying her first word and standing up in her playpen; the three-year-old being entered in nursery school; piano lessons and the inevitable piano recital; the high school play with the two oldest ones in it; temper tantrums galore.

Good Humor Man

Anne, the oldest, making the high school honor society; Hugo's room getting fixed up; Katie needs a bicycle; Jill wants to take sewing lessons; Katie wants a new subscription to "Child Life"; Abby has learned how to talk to Grandma on the telephone; there's a Good Humor man outside ringing his bell; Hugo wants money to go to the movies; my three nephews come for a picnic; Hugo gets a new tennis racquet; Jill has a lovely new dress.

And so it goes. It's all wonderful and I wouldn't have it otherwise. People look at me in a funny way when I tell them I have six children; quite a few seem to think that my wife and I aren't very bright.

They don't understand. They don't know about a house feeling sort of empty with only five.

200 Tremors Shake Town

TERNI, Italy (Reuters)—Some 75,000 Italians were camping out in tents and huts around Terni following more than 200 earth tremors which have shaken the town 60 miles north of Rome during the last two weeks. Only 10,000 of Terni's 85,000 inhabitants were in their homes.

'Fanged Will Rogers' Needs Heavy Editing

By CLYDE GILMOUR

Time Magazine published an enthusiastic piece about Canadian-born Mort Sahl, saluting him as "the first and still the best of the New Comedians whose specialty is topical humor."

The 33-year-old Sahl, says Time, "is emerging as the most successful political satirist in the U.S., a sort of Will Rogers with fangs."

Two years ago I received several sharp needles from Sahl worshippers as a result of a less-than-rapturous opinion expressed concerning one of Sahl's first on-the-spot nightclub recordings, "The Future Lies Ahead" (Verve MGV-15002).

The objectors, I recall, were particularly stung by one sentence which had this to say about their guffawing, head-bobbing, sweater-clad idol:

"The fellow obviously has a lively and unfettered mind, but his discourses are aimless and chaotic, he mumbles and tumbles his words, and his immense self-satisfaction is hard to take in long doses."

Personally, I find that my reactions to the Sahl phenomenon have mellowed a bit since then, if only out of gratitude to Mr. S. for the superbly biting remarks he made in public at the height of the Little Rock race-hate scandal. (The whole problem, as he saw it, boiled down into one simple question: "Would you want your sister to marry Orval Faubus?")

I also agree unreservedly that the very existence of a bold, literate satirist like Sahl during the present era is a healthful sign.

Nonetheless I'm having difficulty in understanding the almost continuous roars of audience laughter which punctuate the monologist's ramblings on Sahl's latest Verve record, "Mort Sahl at the Hungry I" (MGV-15012).

As before, there are some amusing and highly quotable jibes sprinkled through this 42-minute actuality, taped in the San Francisco grotto where the Sahl cult originated in 1953. But there are long and recurring stretches of stop-and-start chitchat which amounts, in my minority opinion, to exactly nothing.

The man's stuff—on records, at least—screams for firm, tough-minded editing to separate the wit from the chaff.

Sukarno Losing Cha-Cha Battle

JAKARTA, Indonesia (AP) —President Sukarno is losing the battle of the cha-cha.

The evidence is plain as young Indonesian couples dance to the bongo beat at a government-run night spot just half a lock from his downtown palace.

Sukarno, a staunch nationalist, went on the attack a year ago. In a series of speeches and statements, he labelled cha-cha and rock 'n' roll the first steps in a foreign cultural imperialism.

The Jakarta army garrison outlawed cha-cha, even in private homes. Records in stores were destroyed, and a fine was ordered for anyone teaching the banned steps.

Sukarno often keeps Jakarta's diplomatic corps going for two hours or more—elderly envoys and their wives weaving hand-in-hand in an endless chain to beat of tom-toms and chants from the spice islands.

But few of Jakarta's city-bred youth follow the presidential lead.

At first they went underground. Teenagers and college students had cha-cha parties at private homes, behind drawn curtains. Foreigners with cha-cha records became popular hosts.

Then came a bolder move. Enterprising band leaders took some of the Indonesian songs Sukarno likes so much and gave them a Latin beat.

The Car Corner

Real Innovator, This Cugnot

By J. T. JONES

When Nicholas Joseph Cugnot completed his pet project in France in 1769, he didn't dream what he'd started.

The project was a kind of cart, with three wheels and a two-cylinder steam engine, and clumsy though it was it rumbled along at about three miles an hour. This was the first successful self-propelled road vehicle—the first automobile.

Because it was difficult to steer, one day Cugnot thundered into a solid wall with it, making it also the first automobile to be involved in a wreck.

Cugnot almost immediately became the first motorist to be jailed and have his vehicle impounded for reckless driving.

The steam-driven road vehicle never amounted to very much on this side of the water. Specimens were built as early as 1790, but financial backing couldn't be found, and each in turn vanished from the scene.

In the early 1800s, England produced a number of steam buses, but it also produced the Red Flag Law which specified a speed limit of three miles an hour plus the famous man walking in front with a red flag.

Instigated by combined pressure of stagecoach and railway operators, this effectively killed not only the steam bus but all other self-propelled vehicles for three decades.

In the 1860s, a German-born Austrian, Siegfried Marcus, and a Belgian-born Frenchman, Etienne Lenoir, were working quite separately on the idea of internal combustion engines. It is interesting that these engines were designed with the automobile in mind.

Lenoir's engine was a single-cylinder device that ran on illuminating gas and turned 100 rpm.

He built a car around it in 1863, and even though it could be easily outpaced by a moderately ambitious burro, it qualifies as the first internal-combustion-engined automobile.

Marcus, meanwhile, built the first carburetor for his otherwise similar engine, and in 1875 he ran the first liquid-fueled automobile.

In 1877 Nikolaus Otto, a German, built the first four-cycle engine—the kind almost universally used in cars today.

Now we come to a couple of key men—Karl Benz and Gottlieb Daimler. Separately they designed and built, in 1885, rudimentary vehicles. Daimler's was really a motorcycle; Benz used three wheels.

But the engines were very good for their time, and more important, Daimler sewed everything up with patents. Manufacturers were licensed throughout Europe and the U.S. to build these engines, and many a pioneering American automobile was pushed by an imported Daimler or Benz power plant.

In the mid-1920s Daimler and Benz lumped their companies together as Daimler-Benz, which is still very much with us.

America's great contribution to the automobile wasn't in design or invention, or anything about the vehicle itself. It was in the way of building it—and in many ways it was the greatest contribution of all.

In 1900, Ransom E. Olds began mass-producing Oldsmobiles—the famed curved-dash model (700 pounds, $650).

But it was in 1908 that the flood gates were opened, when Henry Ford introduced the Model T, the most significant car in history. With it came true mass production, low prices, and today's world, like it or not.

Kerstin Meyer Talented, Considerate

Hard to Believe She Was Spoiled

By BERT BINNY

She describes herself as "the only spoiled child" in her family.

It is hard to believe that Kerstin Meyer, one of the world's greatest mezzo-sopranos, who sings at the Butchart Gardens on Thursday, was ever spoiled. Spoiling does not usually produce people as thoroughly talented, charming, considerate and thoughtful as Miss Meyer.

"No, I was not a child wonder!" she adds. "I started piano at six, but singing at 17."

She was 24 when she made her debut in opera as Azucena in "Il Trovatore" at Stockholm. Since then her roles and the demands on her services have been many.

HOME LITTLE

Since the 1959 Vancouver Festival, for instance, she has managed to find time to be at home for less than two months. Following the 1960 festival, she has engagements in Berlin, Stockholm, London, Berlin again and, in the fall at New York's Met.

Last year her heavy schedule in Vancouver prevented her visiting Victoria.

"This year," she says with a most engaging smile, "I am repairing my sins."

TOO FAST

Miss Meyer enjoys going from place to place, but she explains that she flies only because her schedule demands it.

"Long-distance air trips," she says, "give the brain no time to catch up with the distance."

Among all the large centres where she has appeared Miss Meyer finds her home, Stockholm, the most exacting in the matter of standard of performance. London and Berlin, however, provide larger and very enthusiastic audiences.

WARMER

And, if she changed her home, it would be from Stockholm to Rome, because of the extra warmth.

Why are the greatest performers still nervous after years of experience? Miss Meyer explains that with each succeeding appearance they ask more and more of themselves and they always wonder whether they will be able to attain the new, higher, self-imposed standard.

GO SLOW

Her father was a musician and her mother had a beautiful voice. But, inherited and acquired ability notwithstanding, she feels that "it is a great strain on young singers to be thrust into prominence." Miss Meyer counsels slow, steady progress.

She herself exemplifies the fine results.

Ingrid, Roberto Still Wed

ROME (UPI)—Ingrid Bergman and Roberto Rosselini are man and wife again in the eyes of Italian law, and another big legal battle looms over their matrimonial tangle.

Under pressure from a relentless prosecutor, the case of the annulled marriage of the Swedish actress and the Italian director was re-opened.

Following a bitter 2½-year battle, a Rome court ruled last June that the 1950 marriage of the pair after their Stromboli romance was null and void.

But State Prosecutor Martino Ferrajuolo lodged an appeal yesterday on legal and technical grounds, and his action meant the annulment is not effective until his appeal is examined by the courts.

The case could take weeks or months. Outside Italy, the outcome is largely academic. Miss Bergman has remarried.

By ALAN HARVEY

LONDON (CP) — Isabella Elliot finds that her life fits with geometric precision into an Atlantic triangle.

In her 19 years, she has lived almost the same length of time in Canada, Britain and the United States.

"I'm practically an isosceles," said the attractive, medium-tall actress, whose curves belie the comparison.

LONDON BORN

Miss Elliot—real name Annabella Elliot-Square — was born in London's Knightsbridge district, emigrated to Canada at the age of five, lived in New York for a time and then came back to Britain to study for the stage.

Now she is going back to Canada and then on to New York to try for the part of Eliza Doolittle in a production of "My Fair Lady."

CANADIAN MOTHER

The family home is on Lake Memphremagog, Que., near Sherbrooke. Her mother, a native of Brantford, Ont., was formerly an actress under the name of Annabella Murray. Miss Elliot's great-grandmother, Margaret Polson Murray, founded the Imperial Order Daughters of the Empire in Canada.

Her father, a retired British army officer, is living in London.

'TRISECTING'

Miss Elliott considers her three-country background a lucky break and she'd like to keep it that way, "trisecting" her life among the three English-speaking countries.

Appropriately, she has what is described as a "standard" accent, nurtured in nearly two years of training at London's Royal Academy of Dramatic Art. Whatever the accent, the voice is soft and elegant.

EMPHATICALLY YES

Would she advise Canadian girls to study at RADA? Most emphatically.

"It helped me tremendously. It was there, you might say, that I grew up. One learns to discipline one's temperament and one's wishes, and to get along with other people. It's hard work, but it's fun."

The dark-haired, dark-eyed Miss Elliot, who has also worked as a model, says she still gets nervous before every stage performance.

STAND AND SHIVER

"I just stand in the wings and shiver," she says. "But I love the theatre. It's not all arty and phony as some outsiders think."

Hobbies? Nothing bizarre except her fondness for "adult" westerns. She has seen "Shane" 16 times, by actual count, and went out of her way to visit Wyoming where the film was shot.

Season's Final Concert

By BERT BINNY

The third and final symphony concert at the Butchart Gardens for this year takes place Thursday evening at 8.30.

Mezzo-soprano Kerstin Meyer will be heard in three arias: two from Bizet's "Carmen" and one from Gluck's "Orpheus and Eurydice."

She will also sing Greig's well-known "Ich Liebe Dich," and, with the assistance of the Victoria Meistersingers, conducted by Ted Boulden, Brahms' alto Rhapsody.

The orchestra plays Rossini's overture to "La Gazza Ladra" and the second movement of Beethoven's "Pastoral" (No. 6) Symphony. More in the modern idiom will be their "Saturday Night Waltz" and "Corral Nocturne" from Aaron Copeland's "Rodeo." From the musical comedy stage come excerpts from "The King and I" and "Kiss Me Kate."

There is a change of guest artists at the Smile Show, which yesterday finished a banner opening week. Attendance was twice as high as during the corresponding period last year, and a booking of 21 seats from New York is in for tomorrow evening.

New guest artists are accordionist Al Denoni, who replaces Bert Williams, and magician Ernie Crockford, who replaces harpist Lorna Langley.

Show Business

By Dick Williams

Famous lines of dialogue and bits of business have sometimes haunted actors for a lifetime afterward. Charles Boyer has never been able to shake his "Come wiz me to the Casbah" line, murmured years ago to Hedy Lamarr in "Algiers."

Paul Henreid, today a TV producer-director, has had the same sort of experience. Eighteen years ago in "Now Voyager," he put two cigarets in his mouth, lit them and handed one to Bette Davis.

"This silly thing is still following me," Henreid admits. "In Paris, a woman came up to me and asked if I would light a cigaret for her. A terrible comedian in Vienna saw me come into the club where he was working and stuffed 10 cigarets into his mouth.

"Back home I ran into Red Skelton, and he put five cigars in his mouth."

Henreid finally found the simplest solution was to anticipate his hecklers. Now, whenever he sees some lady's eyes light up with anticipation, he doesn't wait for her question. He simply lights two cigarets and hands her one.

City Man's Device Cleans Up Smoke

A city man is confident he has the answer to the problem of industrial smoke in Victoria.

Larry Whelan, 131 Michigan, is so sure his invention is a winner he's ready to stake $100 that it will burn waste from any local industry and eliminate soot and cinders.

"I'll show them how to clean up the city—fast," he said.

"I'm willing to put down $100 in cold cash to prove I can burn any fuel without causing a smoke nuisance—and on top of that I'll add old truck tires and roofing paper."

It was back in 1956 that Mr. Whelan, a boilermaker employed by Yarrows Ltd., drew a lot of attention when he successfully tested his invention. He built it in his backyard of oil drums, stovepipe, solder, two special nozzles, hose and an old vacuum cleaner motor.

He made a patent search and had plans prepared, then before he completed arrangements to have the device patented, his wife fell seriously ill. He dropped the project then for lack of funds.

He suggested "maybe some of these businessmen who are suffering from the smoke nuisance would like to come down and see how a model of my machine works.

"It would take me a few days to put one together. But I know it works."

Garden Notes

Some Late Starters

By M. V. CHESNUT, FRHS

LATE-SOWN VEGETABLES (J.S., Victoria). From the gardener's standpoint, this is a rather awkward time of the year to move into a new home. True, you can take all your spring-flowering bulbs with you—tulips, daffs, narcissus, scillas, crocus and the like, but this is a bad time to move shrubs and most herbaceous perennials.

I can understand your wish to make the new garden produce some vegetables right away and fortunately, there are quite a few you can start with. I suggest you put in seeds of Cherry Belle radish,, Sweetheart or Imperial 456 head lettuce, any kind of leaf lettuce, early hybrid No. 7 spinach and cress or peppergrass.

Carrots and beets are not likely to grow to full size from such a late sowing, but are all the more tender and sweet for being pulled in their immature state, so I'd take a chance on Scarlet Nantes carrot and Detroit Dark Red beet.

If you can find any onion sets around town, these will provide green salad onions, while seeds of the Welsh onion or the Japanese He-shi-ko white bunching onion will make plants which stand through the winter to produce green onions early next spring. Seeds of spring cabbage and plants of sprouting broccoli and kale can go in now too.

MILDEW ON ROSES (M.E.P., Victoria). A predisposing cause of mildew on roses is dryness at the roots, and I suggest you start your fight against this disfiguring disease by giving each bush a thorough and very deep watering, followed by a heavy mulch of straw, manure, peat, lawn mowings, sawdust, etc.

While Rose Dust contains an ingredient to combat mildew, I think such a violent outbreak as yours should be treated with a specific such as Mildex, Acti-Dione or Later's Garden Fungicide. Mix according to the directions on the package and apply weekly. Don't expect any half-dead leaves to regenerate individual leaves never make a come-back. These should be picked off and burnt.

GRAPEFRUIT HOUSEPLANT. (R.C., Glen Lake). The sprouted seeds you found in a grapefruit will grow strongly if potted up in 3½ or 4 inch pots, using a mixture of two parts good topsoil, one part coarse sand, and one part well rotted manure. Sow the sprouted seeds about half an inch deep and keep in a warm shaded place until the seedlings appear, then full sun thereafter. Keep the soil just nicely moist, never soggy wet or bone dry.

These little grapefruit trees make interesting and attractive foliage plants, but will seldom bloom or bear fruit under houseplant conditions.

MOVING HONEYSUCKLE. (A.E.W., Royal Oak). This is not a good time to move a 15-year-old plant, but if there is no other way of getting at the wall for your remodelling operation, you'll have to take a chance.

Get the new hole dug first, and make up a fill-in mixture of two parts good topsoil, one part peat moss, and one part coarse sand or vermiculite, thoroughly mixed.

Next, make the rounds of the garden shops and see if you can pick up a bottle of Wilt-Pruf. This is a liquid plastic preparation, used to coat the leaves of a plant before transplanting, and its purpose is to prevent the wilting of the foliage while the roots are getting themselves established. If none of the retail stores has it, try one of the merchants—they use it in their business.

Spray the foliage with the Wilt-Pruf, making sure both sides of the leaves are coated, then ease the roots out of the ground, moving it immediately to its new site. As you cover the roots with the fill-in mixture, keep pouring in water to which a few drops of vitamin B1 has been added. Finish the fill-in job with loose, dry soil on top.

If you don't succeed in finding any Wilt-Pruf, you'd better wet down the foliage three or four times a day with a fine spray of plain water for the first week after transplanting.

Free from Sponsors — Forum for Mavericks

Radio for Adult Minds

"Don't subscribe," warned one Southern California newspaper, "unless you are prepared to be caught up in something. A radio station operated for adult minds really does get to be a religion."

WBAI-FM in New York City, KPFA in San Francisco, KPFK in Los Angeles are the sole assets of Pacifica, a non-profit, tax-exempt organization. Each station derives its financial support from its own community. Management and staff are local, with Pacifica providing program exchange and good counsel.

WBAI-FM is a station freed from the demands of commercial sponsors, free from worried university trustees. Within the limits of competence and responsibility, WBAI-FM offers a forum to the maverick as well as the most distinguished minds in the English-speaking world; to the dissenter, even to those who challenge the most basic premises of our society. Where else can these precious "nay-sayers" be heard?

The range of Pacifica's programming selects the best from the many great universities close to its three stations, and also searches out the peripheral crotchety views poured out by restless minds. Some are possibly charlatans, some seem to menace the established order, some are goads and gadflies. Who, among these, should be refused a hearing? Who is wise enough to prejudge the future? History is full of second guesses.

Our staff is a group of highly concerned men and women, largely self-directed and talented along many lines. The announcer will be a poet; the bookkeeper a folk singer. You will never hear the false cathedral voice of omniscience or a cheery morning chant. Vincent Price, James Mason, Steve Allen, Aldous Huxley, Groucho Marx act as disk jockeys and commentators in Los Angeles to help KPFK there.

The question of balance seems to become more important than the presentation of the unique as Pacifica expands to new communities unaccustomed to hearing the raw stuff of opinion on the air.

All of us in Pacifica Radio are in the midst of a serious rethinking of the role of Pacifica. It may be just coincidence, but this new decade appears to mark a general reappraisal. In retrospect the 50s appears to have been years of fear, of short-sighted interest, years of material accumulation. Almost abruptly one now finds people concerned with quality rather than quantity.

We believe WBAI-FM to be a valuable and precious instrument in our mass society. No man need fear that his creation, his thoughts, will not get a fair hearing.

This is one of the most cynical, nihilistic periods in human history. Truth, dignity, integrity have been replaced by the "deal," the "sell," the "image," by conformity and adaptation. Pacifica is a desperate, determined effort to create an institution which both its staffs and its audience can believe in.

Marlon Egged Out of Job

LONDON (NANA) — Marlon Brando, in a mood of exuberance, or annoyance, threw a dish of scrambled eggs across the room, during discussions of "Lawrence of Arabia" with director David Lean in Paris. It is now very doubtful that Brando will make this picture. Cary Grant has been asked to play Lord Allenby in the movie. If he accepts, Mr. Lean will offer the role of Lawrence to English actor Peter O'Toole. And he isn't crying about the probable loss of Marlon. The two don't exactly like each other.

I hear in London that it might be quite a while before Vivien Leigh gives another Lawrence Olivier, that is—the divorce he craves to marry Joan Plowright. Vivien is busy, she isn't feeling too well, and there is still hope that Sir Larry will see the light of reconciliation.

And news of another Larry—Harvey: He has chosen to portray master spy Eddie Chapman rather than to star in "Sanctuary" in Hollywood. The Chapman film, banned for a decade by the British War Office, because of its spy and counterspy disclosures, will be shot in France. Now the question is, can it be shown in England?

Under a dryer at Larry Mathews in New York, I learned of his and her hair sets, toupees for men, wigs for the wives. Jayne Mansfield always takes her wig with her to Europe, but husband Mickey Hargitay has a full head of hair and does not need a toupee—yet.

Tony Perkins, on his two weeks of "Damn Yankees" in Massachusetts, earned $8,000, against a percentage. There's gold in them thar drafty barns.

Jerry Lewis sent congratulations to Buddy Clarke, who just opened his own public relations office. In 1946, when Buddy was leading the band at the Mount Royal Hotel in Montreal, Jerry, who was appearing in a local theatre for $125 a week, came to see Buddy, looked around his ballroom, and breathed, "Boy, if I could ever work in a place like this!"

And the tourists were having their troubles too.
They put that "T" in front, but it's a good bet,
But it doesn't much matter . . . adds to the fun,
As skirting the Islands, we spankingly spun.
I was sorry we were having . . . our demi-Tasse,
As we were whistling, thru Active Pass.
And the G.F. nearly blew her lid,
"Sit Down" . . . she frowned . . . "you act like a kid."
After awhile we went out on the deck,
I lent my binoculars . . . to a guy from Quebec.
T'on the other side . . . we shot our ranch-flivver,
Deas for the first time . . . smack under a river.
Right about here . . . I goTTa work in some plugs,
T'cause I'd come over to look at some rugs.

So we pulled up in front (I knew where to go),
And went upstairs to have coffee with "Joe".
And he was just Ttak-off for Tok-io.
"Lookit," he beamed . . . while "she" adopted a poise,
"With this stack of Br. India's you could make a big noise."
They were 9 by 12's . . . of spray border design,
And the B-I-G Noise . . . is jusT 199,

The big tyee salmon are running at Campbell River. This 50-pound-four-ounce beauty was boated by Harold Oakford of Campbell River Thursday night after he lost some tackle on a big fish the day before. Largest tyee caught so far at Campbell River was a 54-pound-eight-ounce salmon landed by UBC students Gordon McLaughlin of Campbell River and Ken Birch of Victoria. — (Baldwin photo.)

King Fisherman Contest

Skill Not a 'Must' To Win a Prize

A person doesn't have to be an expert fisherman to win a Canadian Pacific Airlines all-expenses-paid trip for two to Mexico, a featherweight aluminum cartop boat or any of $3,000 worth of prizes in The Daily Colonist King Fisherman contest.

All he has to do is to be a subscriber to the Colonist before going fishing . . . and every weigh-in station is prepared to take subscription orders.

Every salmon over five pounds and every trout or bass over one pound entered in the contest means another ticket on the monthly and contest-long hidden weight draws. The size of the fish has no bearing on the winners, except for trophies, crests and valuable merchandise prizes that go to the subscriber catching the heaviest fish in each of the five divisions.

Year-Old Promise

Campsites Slashed Out on Chemainus River

DUNCAN — Campers near here haven't waited for the provincial recreation and conservation department to fulfill its year-old promise.

They are building campsites on the Chemainus River near the forest service suppression camp, eight miles north-west of here in Copper Canyon.

Nearly 12 campsites have been slashed out of the timber and thick underbrush, and latrines established.

"I'd rather come here than anywhere else," said a New Westminster man who has been camping on the river for the last three years. "Its good to get away from the hustle and bustle of the mainland and the bigger campsites."

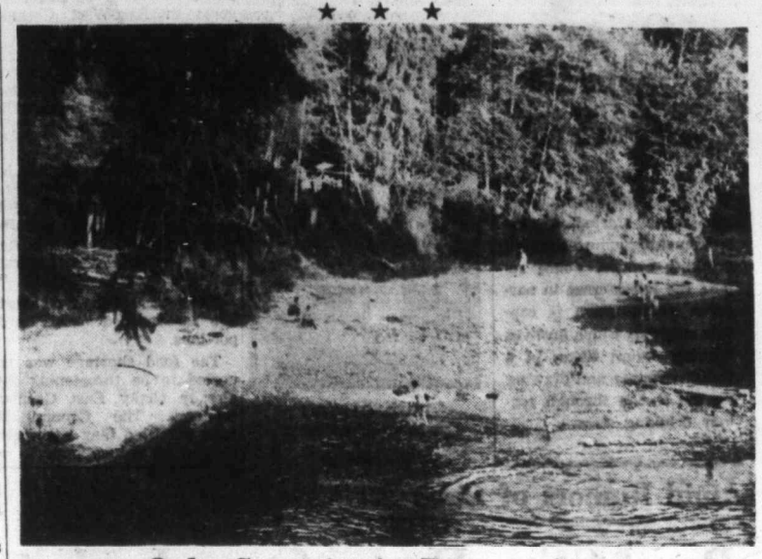

Until recently the area—with sandy shallows for children and deep pools under cliffs for divers and strong swimmers—was the old swimming hole for younger persons who did not mind driving over some of the roughest gravel roads in the district to get to it.

More than a year ago the department of recreation and conservation wrote to the Duncan - Cowichan Chamber of Commerce that development of the river-side area was to be a government project.

So far this summer the swimming areas—a series of pools of slow-moving water—have been packed most nights.

On weekends late - comers are forced to pitch their tents on the road and clear out sites because the beach and camping areas are full.

Only Campsite in Duncan Area

Quickly becoming the most popular—and only—campsite in the Duncan area is this serene Chemainus River area where campers have cleared nearly a dozen tenting spaces. The government has said it will develop the Copper Canyon property. — (Colonist photo by Charles Thompson.)

Boat Crash Injures Seattle Man

CAMPBELL RIVER — A Seattle man suffered head injuries and a broken jaw when two small boats collided near the government dock here yesterday morning

Five others were taken to hospital but were released after a checkup.

Wilbur Abrams, 53, of Seattle was flown to Vancouver General Hospital by B.C. Airlines aircraft yesterday afternoon.

The boat he was in collided with another skippered by Jack Birtch, of Campbell River, who was fishing with his son, eight-year-old Jamie.

The Abrams' boat, in which were traveling the injured man's wife and two children, was holed. The family was taken aboard the Birtch vessel.

OUTDOORS

with Alec Merriman

Within two months, probably early September, provincial government recreation department officials and officials of the Canadian Pacific Railway will sit down for "cold turkey" talks, which should see some 268,000 acres added to Vancouver Island's Strathcona Park.

Big majority of property concerned is about 55,000 acres of the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway land grant property in the Forbidden Plateau area and the western corner of Great Central Lake.

Preliminary talks were started last July, but were interrupted when the C.P.R. decided to make a full inventory of its timber and other assets in the vast E and N land belt, which covers all the east coast of Vancouver Island from Victoria to the Campbell lakes.

That inventory was completed last month and negotiations for actual annexation of the E and N property are ready to go ahead.

It is part of a plan to bring into the confines of the now 529,920 acre class A provincial park, all of Buttle Lake, part of new Upper Campbell Lake, more of the Elk River valley, some 55,000 acres of Forbidden Plateau country and the western corner of Great Central Lake.

Property owners involved include the CPR through its E and N railway land grants. The Elk River Timber Co. which owns most of the non-park land around Buttle Lake, and the Canadian Collieries Ltd.

Park Boundaries Revised

It has been suggested that Strathcona Park boundaries be completely revised and made to include all of the Campbell River system from Elk Falls and the John Hart dam to the present park boundary, which takes in just the southern two-thirds of Buttle Lake, which is at the top end of the Campbell River system.

Present plans apparently do not call for inclusion of the timber company-owned skiing slopes and the Forbidden Plateau lodge property, which are immediately below the lake-studded Forbidden Plateau proper.

It would be a shame not to include these areas in any revision of the boundaries of Strathcona Park.

Elk River Timber Co., a division of the Scott Paper Company was logging on the slopes of Mount Becher, two years ago between the lodge and the mountain top. Adjacent areas are now in danger of being logged and now is the time to save it.

"It has definitely got to be saved for the people," says Mrs. Lillian Chambers, who operates the lodge with her husband, Gervaise.

When H. C. McQuillan, Conservative MP for Comox-Alberni, advocated last week that the Forbidden Plateau area be taken over as a national park, he was a little late in his ideas, although federal aid in the development of Strathcona Park and purchase of lands to extend it, would undoubtedly be welcome.

Long Range Development

Provincial parks branch officials have been busy for two or three years planning a long range development of Strathcona Park which would include establishment of camping sites at various wilderness areas where several trails would meet. At these areas shed shelters would be built from native material and rough toilet facilities would be provided.

Ultimately there would be a hikers trail from the Forbidden Plateau to Buttle Lake over rugged mountainous country.

It is expected the pattern would develop that a party would drive from Courtenay to the Forbidden Plateau country, hike through the park to Buttle Lake, and be met there by someone with a boat.

Parks branch officials visualize a wilderness wonderland being made accessible by a series of hiking and riding trails throughout the park. Many of these trails will extend from Creek Delta campsites on Buttle Lake and extend to the upland lakes, streams and Alpine area of the Forbidden Plateau.

Access to the enlarged park would be by car to Buttle Lake from Campbell River and the Forbidden Plateau from Courtenay and by boat to the head of Great Central Lake, but travel through the park would have to be by boat in the Buttle Lake area and by hiking or horseback through the rest of the park.

The park can also be reached by boat from Tofino to Herbert Inlet and the mouth of the Moyeha River where Strathcona Park hits tidewater.

A five to seven day hike, following the Moyeha River nearly to its head waters and then the Thelwood drainage system, over some mountains of the coastal range, and the Myra Creek drainage system leads to Buttle Lake.

An unnamed group of lakes, west of 7,219-foot high Mount Golden Hinde in the heart of Strathcona Park, is parks officials choice for one of the central camping developments for wilderness travellers in Strathcona Park.

Tasty Salt Spring Lamb Draws 800 to Barbecue

On foot, by car, in $50,000 yachts and small boats, some 800 persons thronged the northeast shore of Ganges harbor yesterday for the Gulf Island Ferry Co's annual Salt Spring Island lamb barbecue.

The event, rapidly gaining the stature and reputation of the internationally renowned lamb barbecue held on Saturna Island each year, drew more than 30 boatloads of yachtsmen in spite of a brisk wind and choppy seas, and capacity ferry-loads of private cars taxed hastily-prepared barbecue parking facilities.

Dock space in the crowded harbor was at a premium, and as one boatload of sated visitors would leave, another would immediately move into the vacant berth.

At the barbecue site on the estate of Mrs. R. Toynbee, crews kept no less than 16 lamb carcasses on iron spits at one time, and genial host Gavin Mouat circulated among seated gourmets urging second helpings.

Task of operating the barbecue and serving guests was handled by Saturna Island residents who have made their own similar annual barbecue a highlight of the Gulf Islands tourist calendar.

'Take Bull by Horns' And Seize E & N

COBBLE HILL—The provincial government is to be asked to "take the bull by the horns" and take over the E & N Railway.

It is one of the few answers to a growing highway congestion on the Island, according to the executive of the Vancouver Island Ratepayers' Association.

"The government has, by starting a transportation service, shown it can take the bull by the horns and show the big companies what could be done," said George Bonner, ratepayers' president, yesterday.

"Our executive has now decided to ask the government to take over the railway and do something with it," he said.

LETTER SENT

A letter has already been sent to Highways Minister Phil Gaglardi suggesting that because of highway congestion by trucks going "far too fast" that trucking firms should be required to provide their own roads like logging companies.

The minister was asked to consider the future traffic problems and their "threat to life and limb" if allowed to continue, Mr. Bonner said.

Bumper Cowichan Wheat Crop Cut Weeks Before Normal

DUNCAN — A damp spring and hot summer has produced a bumper wheat crop here that has matured weeks in advance of normal.

One of many farmers in the area cutting wheat is William Koers, Lakes Road, who said he got 10,000 pounds of grain on four acres.

THRASHING OVER

He completed thrashing yesterday and said he had not expected to get half the amount. It was the first wheat crop on the high, dry property he rented near Lakes and Wicks Roads.

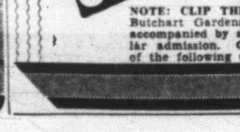

Other farmers said it is the first time in recent years that they have been able to cut wheat in July. Oats and barley are not yet cut.

Mr. Koers said his crop was planted in the fall. Spring planted wheat has yet to be cut.

"It was almost too hot to work," said Mr. Koers. "We had to lie down under the tree after every load."

Yesterday he completed baling the leftover straw and estimated it would be about six tons for barn bedding.

Germans Riot for Food

BERLIN (UPI) — Reports reaching West Berlin said yesterday that food riots have flared in Communist East Germany amid growing unrest over a shortage of everything from bread to meat.

The West Berlin newspaper B. Z. said police broke up two food riots in the Soviet Zone town of Brandenburg, 25 miles west of Berlin.

The newspaper reports said that angry Brandenburg housewives converged on the market place and blamed the shortages on the forced collectivization of farms carried out by Communists this spring.

The reports of food riots could not be confirmed. But the East German Communists disclosed they had imported several hundred million marks worth of food to counter unrest caused by a growing food shortage. The East German mark is valued at about 24 cents in East-West German trade.

The West German government last night announced it has offered food to East Germany to help combat the shortage.

OFFER BROADCAST

The aid offer was made by Franz Thedieck, state secretary in the West German Ministry for All-German Affairs in a broadcast to the Soviet Zone over the American-run Berlin radio station RIAS.

Thedieck said the food shortage has reached "crisis" proportions.

The food shortage was reported to be threatening the already shaky East German economy. The Communists have admitted they have been obliged to reduce imports of raw materials and manufactured products in order to pay for shipments of meat, butter and other food items.

PRODUCTION CUT

The state-run automobile factory in Eisenach was said to have cut its production of Wartburg cars from 100 to 25 a day because of raw material shortages. One thousand of the factory's 8,300 workers were reported to have been laid off.

FAILED TO MEET

Herbert Jarowinsky, East German deputy trade and supply minister, said the government is importing "several million marks" worth of food because East German farmers had not met their delivery quotas to the state.

Amid Rumors of Cuba Struggle

Raul Slips Home from Junket Rushes to Brother's Bedside

HAVANA (UPI) — Raul Castro arrived home secretly from abroad yesterday and hurried off to a meeting with ailing brother Fidel that sparked rumors Yankee-hating Raul would take over as temporary prime minister until Fidel recovers.

Two top surgeons were reported to have been consulted about Fidel's ailment which was said to be extremely painful, although not necessarily serious. Surgery was believed indicated.

Raul had spent five weeks abroad, visiting Moscow, Prague and Cairo, while he denounced the United States for "imperialism" and praised the Communist bloc for its support of its "Cuban brothers."

SPREADING FIGHT

Raul, who once kidnapped a number of American military and civilian personnel from the U.S. Navy base at Guantanamo during the Castro revolution, returned in the midst of what appeared to be a spreading battle for power among the revolution's leaders.

The quarrel was said to be pitting Fidel against Communist-oriented Ernesto "Che" Guevara, Argentine-born director of the Cuban National Bank, who has been one of the most outspoken opponents of the United States.

Insistent but unconfirmed reports swept Havana that Raul would step into the prime minister's office on a temporary basis, making him acting chief of government, while Fidel was recovering.

Germans Riot for Food

BERLIN (UPI) — Reports reaching West Berlin said yesterday that food riots have flared in Communist East Germany amid growing unrest over a shortage of everything from bread to meat.

The West Berlin newspaper B. Z. said police broke up two food riots in the Soviet Zone town of Brandenburg, 25 miles west of Berlin.

The newspaper reports said that angry Brandenburg housewives converged on the market place and blamed the shortages on the forced collectivization of farms carried out by Communists this spring.

The reports of food riots could not be confirmed. But the East German Communists disclosed they had imported several hundred million marks worth of food to counter unrest caused by a growing food shortage. The East German mark is valued at about 24 cents in East-West German trade.

The West German government last night announced it has offered food to East Germany to help combat the shortage.

OFFER BROADCAST

The aid offer was made by Franz Thedieck, state secretary in the West German Ministry for All-German Affairs in a broadcast to the Soviet Zone over the American-run Berlin radio station RIAS.

Thedieck said the food shortage has reached "crisis" proportions.

The food shortage was reported to be threatening the already shaky East German economy. The Communists have admitted they have been obliged to reduce imports of raw materials and manufactured products in order to pay for shipments of meat, butter and other food items.

PRODUCTION CUT

The state-run automobile factory in Eisenach was said to have cut its production of Wartburg cars from 100 to 25 a day because of raw material shortages. One thousand of the factory's 8,300 workers were reported to have been laid off.

FAILED TO MEET

Herbert Jarowinsky, East German deputy trade and supply minister, said the government is importing "several million marks" worth of food because East German farmers had not met their delivery quotas to the state.

Amid Rumors of Cuba Struggle

HAVANA (UPI) — Raul Castro arrived home secretly from abroad yesterday and hurried off to a meeting with ailing brother Fidel that sparked rumors Yankee-hating Raul would take over as temporary prime minister until Fidel recovers.

Two top surgeons were reported to have been consulted about Fidel's ailment which was said to be extremely painful, although not necessarily serious. Surgery was believed indicated.

Raul had spent five weeks abroad, visiting Moscow, Prague and Cairo, while he denounced the United States for "imperialism" and praised the Communist bloc for its support of its "Cuban brothers."

SPREADING FIGHT

Raul, who once kidnapped a number of American military and civilian personnel from the U.S. Navy base at Guantanamo during the Castro revolution, returned in the midst of what appeared to be a spreading battle for power among the revolution's leaders.

The quarrel was said to be pitting Fidel against Communist-oriented Ernesto "Che" Guevara, Argentine-born director of the Cuban National Bank, who has been one of the most outspoken opponents of the United States.

Insistent but unconfirmed reports swept Havana that Raul would step into the prime minister's office on a temporary basis, making him acting chief of government, while Fidel was recovering.

Idaho Fire Area Crash

City Pilot Killed In Water Bombing

First Flight Was Made As Observer

A 25-year-old Victoria pilot was one of three men who died instantly Wednesday in the crash of a B-25 water bombing plane in the Hells Canyon area of Idaho.

Peter Jeffrey, 25, born in Victoria and formerly of 1751 Cedar Hill Crossroad, was on the bombing mission as an observer to familiarize himself with the specialized flying techniques necessary in fire fighting. It was his first flight in a B-25.

PAST TWO YEARS

For the past two years, he had made his home in Boise, Idaho, with his wife, the former Diane Roskelly of Victoria. He was a pilot for Pacific Intermountain Securities operating out of Boise.

SURVIVORS

Traditional Scottish Dances, Games Draw 1,100

Some 1,100 spectators turned out for the 23rd Highland Games, held for the first time this year at Victoria High School. Officials said cinder track drew many fine athletes for track meet, but despite record entry in dancing and piping, attendance wasn't up to expectations. Bad weather helped thin crowd.—(Colonist photo.)

Reeve Seeks Views

Reaction of Esquimalt ratepayers to the proposed scheme for a $400,000 ice rink-sports arena is being sought by Reeve A. C. Wurtele.

The reeve said last night reaction so far to the explanatory pamphlets mailed Thursday to all property owners in the municipality has been "very good."

ONE COMPLAINT

Only one complaint has been received. Mr. Wurtele said the person objected to it as "too grand a scheme" and added the curling rink should not be made part of the scheme "at the people's expense."

"The council wouldn't want to modify the scheme at all," the reeve said.

"I don't think the people need be alarmed. It's certainly an ambitious scheme—$400,000 is a lot of money. But it's not too ambitious for our youngsters and for Greater Victoria."

REVENUE PRODUCER

Mr. Wurtele said exhaustive studies made by council showed the curling rink would produce revenue needed to make operation of the arena profitable.

Financial soundness of the scheme is supported, the reeve pointed out, by fact that the $400,000 bylaw which goes to a vote Aug. 13 was approved in principle by the department of municipal affairs.

"If it were not so," he added, "the department would never have sanctioned holding of the referendum."

$40,000 YEAR

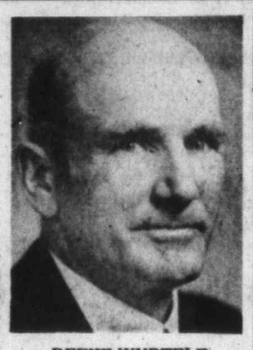

Mr. Wurtele said council estimated annual cost of operating the arena would amount to some $40,000 and "certainly we will take in more than that amount."

It would be operated by a manager and maintenance man under direction of an arena commission. The commission would also control operation of concessions to increase revenue.

FIRM PRICES

Firm prices have been obtained from both firms interested in building the arena, but no figures have been made public yet.

Mr. Wurtele said a completion date of Feb. 1, 1961, he regarded as "very optimistic," and added it would probably be a "little later than that."

Winery Order Filled

A force of 500 pickers descended on the loganberry vines of Saanich late this week to fill a winery order of more than 250 tons of berries.

Having filled quotas to mainland jam manufacturers and frozen food packing houses, growers turned their attention to this final phase of the loganberry season.

FULLY RIPE

Saanich Fruit Growers' President Herbert Bickford said last night the berries had to be fully ripened before sale to the winery.

"The heat wave has not affected the quality of the berries," Mr. Bickford said, "but they are smaller." He said temperatures in the picking areas were up to as far as 110 degrees. "Today (Saturday) was a good day for the pickers."

At Festival

Victoria Night Aug. 12

What may grow into a regular "Victoria night" at the Vancouver International Festival will be launched this year Aug. 12.

A special bus-boat-air lift has been organized to take a party from the city to Queen Elizabeth Theatre for a performance of the Peking Opera. Cost, including transportation, dinner aboard the government ferry, theatre and return by air is $15.75. Tickets are available at Featherstone Travel Service Ltd.

The party will be led by Mayor Percy Scurrah and Mrs. Scurrah and will be greeted by Vancouver Mayor Tom Alsbury. It was organized by local members of the Vancouver Festival Society.

Two Hurt In Crash

One driver and a passenger were taken to Royal Jubilee Hospital last night from a two-car collision on Cadboro Bay Road at Maynard.

Robert Carlow, 2956 Albina, driver who was thrown from his car onto the road, received a checkup at hospital. Mrs. Ernesto De LaRosa of San Benito, Texas, passenger in a car driven by Hector Cardenas of Port Lewis, Wash., was admitted for treatment of shock.

Workers, Materials

Help on the Way For Fire Victims

Help is on the way for the Crampton family of four left homeless by fire Friday. There was no insurance.

A work party will take the first steps in building a new home for the family today, but they need a bulldozer.

Roy Tutte, one of the organizers of the party, said last night they didn't want the machine to dig a basement just to scrape the gravel off and blade down to the clay.

PEOPLE WONDERFUL

He said people were wonderful in their response to help. "A lumber truck from Mitchell and Anderson of Sidney dropped a load off on the property even before the committee decided to go ahead and build again," he said.

The old home will be left standing to be taken down at the owner's leisure. "The important thing is to get a place put together for them to live in," Mr. Tutte said.

NUMBER DONATIONS

A number of donations have already come in for the Crampton Fund. The family have enough emergency clothing to take care of their present needs, "but there's always next month," Mr. Tutte said.

In charge of the fund are N. T. Wright, fire chief G. A. Gardner and Roy Tutte. Cheques should be made out to the Crampton Fund and mailed to P.O. Box 568 Sidney or the Sidney branch of the Bank of Montreal. People with goods, materials, equipment, clothing or furniture to donate should call GR 5-1421 or GR 5-2760 regarding their gifts.

Mr. Tutte suggested that Victorians interested in the fund might leave their donations at Goodwill Enterprises, 560 Yates Street.

Ring Found In Wreckage

It wasn't all bad that came out of the fire that destroyed the home of the Crampton family of 820 Towner Park Road, North Saanich, Friday.

A group of men combing the wreckage for salvage yesterday found Mrs. Sheila Crampton's engagement ring.

Biting Wind Whips, Chills Scots' Knees

A biting wind whipped the kilts and chilled the knees of Scots who came from as far away as Winnipeg and Texas for the 23rd annual Highland Gathering held here yesterday.

Inclement weather undoubtedly contributed to the disappointing crowd of some 1,100 who watched a full day's program staged for the first time this year on Victoria High School grounds.

Despite this, however, Victoria Highland Games' Association president Robbie Robinson said last night it was a successful day.

A record entry of more than 200 in the dancing and piping sections drew competitors from up-Island, the lower mainland, Edmonton, and the western states as far south as Palo, Alto, Calif.

BIGGEST TURNOUTS

The biggest turnout of track stars in the history of the games included four B.C. members of Canada's team going to the Rome Olympics.

It was mainly to obtain use of a cinder track that the annual games was moved from Macdonald Park. Officials said yesterday they considered the move justified by the turnout of top athletes this year.

MEET EXPENSES

The gate isn't expected to meet expenses for the annual gathering. Mr. Robinson said officials had hoped for a bigger turnout. But he stressed the financial success of the meet wasn't the prime aim of the association—"we are here to provide a setting for our youngsters to prove themselves, both in dancing and piping and track and field."

He said the annual event is "Victoria's biggest outdoor show" and warrants the support of local residents. It already is a big tourist draw.

Dancing judges this year were John Hind of Los Angeles and C. Stewart Smith of San Francisco.

Around Town

Sunshine, Cloud —Little Cooler Today's Forecast

Victorians heading for the wide open spaces today can expect some sunshine, some cloudiness and air a little cooler than it has been in recent days.

No general rain is expected and temperatures probably will range in the 70s in most areas and in the 60s near the water, said weatherman William Mackie.

Water Rates Up

Water rates will go up tomorrow in Victoria.

The new rates, an increase of about 40 per cent, were passed at city council last week.

Coucil first decided in April to raise the rates to cover a 30 per cent boost in the Greater Victoria Water Board's wholesale rate and also to bring a "fair return" on the water system.

$300 in Cash Stolen

Mr. and Mrs. Ray Bourland, of San Fernando, Calif., yesterday reported the theft of $300 in cash and $209 in company cheques from their room at Crystal Court, 683 Belleville.

Mrs. Bourland said she awoke at 4.50 a.m. and saw two youths run from the room with a purse containing a watch, two wallets with the money and personal papers. A wallet containing $40 was later found behind St. Ann's Academy and the other wallet, empty, was found on Rupert Street.

Internationally-known Victoria bird painter, 22-year-old Fenwick Lansdowne, 745 Newport, will have 45 paintings on exhibit in a one-man show at Tryon Gallery, London, Eng., in May.

He announced the showing this week after returning from a two-month visit to England, where he sketched birds in their native habitat.

In the meantime, in September, a travelling exhibition of his paintings will start a nine-month tour of western provinces.

En route to England in May, Mr. Lansdowne was mobbed by autograph - seekers in Toronto and greeted enthusiastically in New York City.

Olympic Fund Gift Far from Definite

Finance committee chairman Ald. Arthur Dowell said yesterday he had no idea if city council would consider making a contribution to the Olympic fund. He denied earlier reports quoting him as saying council might look favorably on a request for a donation to make up the shortage of $30,000 in the fund to send B.C. athletes to Rome.

"I said council has never been asked for a grant," said Ald. Dowell. "But I wouldn't care to make any further comment because I don't know if we have the money for it."

He was commenting on statement that Olympic fund officials are seeking more donations from Victorians. A spokesman said there have been a few local donations so far and city council has given nothing.

Anyone wishing to contribute should send donations to the Treasurer, B.C. Amateur Sports Council, University Endowment Lands, Vancouver.

Program Ends Wednesday

Playground Attendance Tops 40,000

Big Field Sports Day

Total attendance at city park playgrounds this summer is expected to top 40,000 when the six-week program ends Wednesday.

Wind-up of the program, held daily in nine Victoria parks, will take the form of a field sports day at Central Park which is expected to draw more than 1,000 youngsters.

There will be foot races and novelty events for boys and girls from five to 18. A specially-constructed ring will see boys trading punches in their own weight class in the annual parks boxing competition. Boys and girls will take part in a tether-ball tournament.

A special feature added this year will be an extensive display of children's handicrafts with a dozen youngsters giving on-the-spot demonstrations of the skills learned during the summer.

The field day starts at 1 p.m. and the last contest will be decided around 3.30 p.m., it is expected. Parents and friends are invited.

Playgrounds at Central and Beacon Hill parks will be open as usual Wednesday morning.

City playgrounds director Gordon Hartley said yesterday attendance is expected to at least equal last year's figure of more than 40,000.

As in past years, attendance boomed for the first two or three weeks of the summer program, then tailed off, dropping to its lowest ebb during the hot weather of the past few days.

Throughout the program large numbers of high school students turned up daily at the parks. Mr. Hartley warned this development—blamed on summer job shortage—will be repeated.

Playground supervisors reported older teenagers "by and large were most co-operative and helpful . . . but not overly energetic."

This poses a serious problem for next year and in the future, said Mr. Hartley. "They caused us no trouble," he said, "the problem is one that should be worked on."

The solution probably lies in future provision of instructors and equipment for tumbling, acrobatics, boxing, and more specialized handicrafts.

Popular Contest

Hole-in-One On This Week

The Gyro Club will hold its 21st annual hole-in-one contest this week from Wednesday to Saturday in Royal Athletic Park. Proceeds will be used for development of Cadboro Bay Park where the club has already spent $45,000.

The contest has proven popular and competition is keen for a $50 prize for scoring on a 75-yard driving range. Prizes of smaller amounts are also given. Laurie Kerr and Ronald Willey will give golfing demonstrations.

The carnival will consist of a "modified" midway with rides for children, games of skill and refreshment booths staffed by Gyro members and Gyronettes.

Grounds will open at 7.30 p.m. daily except Saturday, when events will start at 1.30 p.m.

Your Problems

By Ann Landers

Dear Ann Landers: I am one of those "nosey" women who frequently opens medicine cabinets when I'm visiting. In defence of myself as well as other women, I would like to say it has nothing to do with my nose outside of the fact that I am merely looking for some powder to put on it.

How many women remember to take their purses into the bathroom? Darned few I'll bet. I never do. When I look at myself in the mirror I invariably see that my hair could use combing and my nose needs powder. The natural thing is to scout around for implements to do a repair job.

I couldn't for the life of me tell you what else is in the cabinet. Apologize, please.—NO SNOOP.

Dear No Snoop: Sorry, but in my book you are compounding a felony. A hostess who wishes to supply her guests with implements for a repair job will leave them out in plain sight.

When you must look in the medicine cabinet for the tools it's reasonable to assume they are not intended for your use.

May I humbly suggest you cultivate the habit of taking your purse into the bathroom?

Dear Ann Landers: What would you do if you were planning to graduate in June and one crummy teacher gave you a flunk and you had to go to summer school in order to get that one lousy credit?

Well, it happened to me and I want to tell you it was horrible. Not only did I miss out on my graduation exercises with all my friends, but I had all my announcements printed up and couldn't send them out.

What I want to know is this: After I get one credit in summer school, shall I send out the announcements to my friends and relatives and write: "Graduated in summer school." I don't want gifts, I just want them to know I graduated. — BETTER LATE THAN NEVER.

Dear Late: Sorry, but in this case I think "Never is better than late." Sending out announcements under these circumstances would appear to be an open pitch for gifts, even though you don't mean it that way.

Too bad you missed out on graduating with your pals, but this is an example of how important one lousy credit can be.

Dear Ann Landers: I've only been married three years and my husband and I are paying for a home, a car and some doctor bills.

My two brothers are much better off financially than my husband is. They are putting me in a very uncomfortable position and I need help because I don't know the right thing to do.

Our father passed away recently. A man came over to see us about buying a stone for Papa's grave. He showed us some pictures and made some suggestions. He was a nice man and didn't try to pressure us into anything.

My brothers agreed on the most expensive stone in the book. I said nothing. Then Vern, the oldest brother, turned to my husband and said: "Of course we'll split the cost three ways."

When we got home my husband told me how much our share would be. I was shocked. We can't afford this expense, Ann. I treated my father with great respect and loved him dearly when he was alive. I think this is what counts, and not an expensive stone. What do you say? Please tell me what to do. — ONLY DAUGHTER.

Dear Daughter: Give your brother a cheque for an amount which you can afford and tell him this is the best you can do.

Green Grapes with Sole

OTTAWA (CP) — Seedless green grapes as a stuffing for sole are recommended by the department of fisheries for summer fare.

The department, constantly searching for interesting ways of preparing fish in the hope of tempting more Canadians to eat seafood, offers this recipe:

Separate and season sole fillets, then cover each with seedless halved green grapes. Roll the fillets, jellyroll fashion, and fasten with a pick.

Place in a shallow, greased baking dish, brush with melted butter and bake at 450 degrees for 15 minutes.

When the fillet rolls are cooked, transfer to a heated platter and remove the picks. Serve them topped with hot white sauce and garnished with half grapes and parsley.

Clothes Make Your Man

By HARRY JUSTER

Dear Mr. Juster: My mother takes apart practically every fellow I've dated. I started going with a boy of modest means. I think he's nice but she is trying to discourage my seeing him because his shoes always seem to need a shine and are run down at the heels. She says this tells a lot about him. Do you think this tells anything?—Dubious

All it tells is that he probably needs to be made aware that his appearance influences people's impressions. Tactfully suggest that keeping shoes shined is a simple do-it-yourself project and new heels aren't too expensive. As for your mother, tell her that a boy with a run down heel isn't necessarily one himself.

Dear Mr. Juster: Before going on our vacation, I bought my husband two pair of Bermuda shorts. Much to my disappointment, he absolutely refused to wear them. He happens to be quite short and has a "bay window." For that reason he says he wouldn't be caught dead in them because he'd look so silly. Isn't he being overly conservative? — Mrs. L.G.

No, just sensible. It's a wise man who can see his true self. Your husband recognizes that, for him, Bermuda is a great place to visit, not to wear. They'll cut him down even further and exaggerate his "bay window." He's smart in staying to trim-styled, pleated slacks that add height and hide bulges.

Dear Mr. Juster: Sometimes I think this business of telling a man what or what not to wear can go too far. Ever since I can remember, I've always worn starched collars. Now my wife is trying to talk me into letting her do them without any starch because you or someone else claims it's more comfortable. Isn't this something for me to decide? —D.N.

I agree. This is something for you to decide. Please tell me, though, if you have worn nothing but the starched kind, how can you make a decision about soft collars until you have tried them? I've met very few men who don't prefer their comfort, particularly in hot weather.

Dear Mr. Juster: I bought an Indian madras sport shirt because of its unusual colorings. When the salesman called it a "bleeding madras" I nodded dumbly, not wanting to show my ignorance. I learned what it meant after my wife put it in the washing machine. You can guess how unhappy she was to find it wasn't color fast. Isn't it impractical to have to wash it separately?—ED C.

Depends on how much you enjoy the out-of-the-ordinary. A feature of these fabrics is the special dyes used to create unique colorings. These dyes are not fast. As a result, after washing, the effects are even richer. Now you decide—is this worth the extra effort involved?

TIP FOR THE DAY

A vacationing reader writes, "Thought I'd pass on a little trick I learned to keep trousers from wrinkling at night. Instead of using a beat up wire hanger, which is what most motel rooms had, I placed the cuffs across the top dresser drawer, then closed it and let them hang. Result, not a wrinkle."

CHURCH DELEGATES

EDINBURGH, Scotland (CP) —About 4,000 delegates—half of them from the U.S. and Canada — will be here next month for the world convention of the Churches of Christ.

New Look Is Slick

By ROSANNA GROARKE

LONDON (Reuters) — British fashion circles are buzzing about the new aura of elegance Princess Margaret has acquired with her marriage to Antony Armstrong-Jones.

Starting with her simple wedding gown the princess has found a new look best described as slick.

Fashion experts feel that for the first time she really deserves to be called one of the world's smartest women.

The basis of the princess' new look is a completely uncluttered line which probably owes much to the cameraman's eye of her husband, trained to see everything in terms of form.

PREFERS PLAIN SHEATH

The princess now prefers plain fabrics and prints, dead plain sheath dresses to buttons and bows.

Her current wardrobe makes her look taller. For instance, a navy-blue silk suit she wore for Ascot races and a school prize-giving has a short, boxy jacket which stops just below the waist. This gives the petite princess a long-legged look.

The suit is collarless, like most of Princess Margaret's new clothes. This, with the new short hair-do adopted for her honeymoon, also helps the uncluttered look, as do the brimless, toque hats she has been wearing.

The colors worn now by Princess Margaret are clear and definite and set off her honeymoon suntan.

B.C. Election Date Expected This Week

Bennett Clan Gathers for Holidays

Main Street Familiar Stomping Ground

Kelowna's main street is a familiar stomping ground for the premier, who has a thriving hardware business in the Okanagan beauty spot. Wherever he goes people stop to talk to him about subjects ranging from fishing to the next election. He is seen talking things over with D. C. Fillmore.

I Just Want to Live a Life That's Normal

Nearly Blind But Mother Holds Job

By EDNA USHER

TORONTO (TNS)—Mrs. Peter Briggs, 23, is almost blind, but does all her own housework. And looks after her 14-month-old son Richard. And holds down a full time job in an office.

"I just want to live a normal life," she says.

Mrs. Briggs has about 10 per cent of normal vision She can distinguish light from dark, can read typescript from about four inches, and watch television from three feet away.

"As a baby, I could scarcely see at all," she said.

OPERATION HELPS

"At three years old I had an operation to improve my sight. It did, though I don't remember to what extent.

"Two years ago I had another operation to remove cataracts, and this has increased my vision again.

NEW WORLD

"After being treated as totally blind—I attended the school for the blind at Brantford and could read and write only Braille — having more sight was like discovering a new world.

GRASS GREENER

"The grass was greener. I could distinguish the bricks in the walls, everything seemed bigger.

"But it took a long time to adjust—I saw double for about six months.

WANT HOME

Married two years ago, she and her husband, Peter, hope one day to buy their own house.

"You can't save if only the man in the family works, so I'm going out to work, too, the same as a fully-sighted woman would," she said.

WELL ORGANIZED

Anybody who keeps house and goes out to work must be well-organized.

An almost-blind person needs a super system.

Mrs. Briggs has a place in her home for everything, from polishes to Richard's favorite toys.

KEPT IN PLACE

"I haven't time to waste looking for things," she said. "They've got to be in the right place."

Bottle Plain Bliss to Richard

Bliss! Sixteen-month-old Richard Briggs concentrates on his bottle, held by his mother, Mrs. Peter Briggs, who has only about 10 per cent vision.

NO WHITE STICK

She goes to her job as dictaphone typist by streetcar ("I know I'm getting on the right car, because it's the one most people get on," she said. She doesn't carry a white stick.

At work her colleagues sometimes forget that she is blind and give her small print to read.

EMBARRASSING

"It can be embarrassing to be blind," said Mrs. Briggs. "I hate to admit that I can't see."

When she completed her junior matriculation at Brantford she could read and write in Braille, but not in script. She taught herself to read ("there was no special course for the partially sighted at the time,") and just a year ago learned to write cursive.

FIRST AMBITION

Her first ambition was to be a model. She took a self-improvement course, but her teachers insisted she wear dark glasses. "That cut my vision to zero," she said.

HOW TO WALK

"I had to give up the idea of being a model at least for the time being. But I learned to apply makeup properly, how to walk and dress well, and this has given me confidence."

Mrs. Briggs next worked in stores operated by the Canadian National Institute for the Blind.

CASHIER JOB

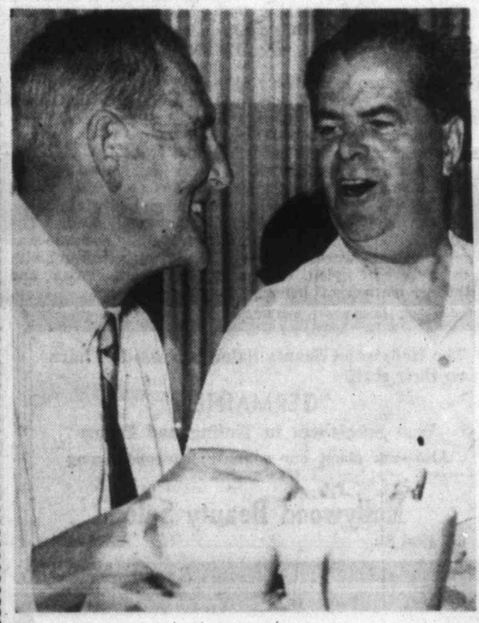

Then she became cashier in a cafeteria.

"I'll try almost any job, even if it has never been tried by a blind person before," she said.

LEARNS QUICKLY

Last year, Mrs. Briggs took a course in dictaphone operating and typing, completing it in five months instead of the usual 10.

"My husband and I want a house of our own," she said. "I've been told that further operations might improve my sight; but it's costly, I'll never be able to see perfectly and we need our own place for our son . . ."

One ritual the premier never misses when he's in Kelowna is the koffeeklatch held each morning at Tillie's Grill. Old-time residents of the town get together to hold discussions on any topic which meets their fancy. Sometimes the debate gets a little heated but everyone enjoys themselves. This picture, taken at one of the 10 a.m. meetings, shows the premier with Robert Whillis of Kelowna. Afterwards the nine men present tossed to see who would pay. Premier Bennett lost.

Premier Bennett Will Name Date When Time Ripe

By PETER BRUTON

Political observers and opposition politicians have been freely predicting there will be a provincial election in British Columbia this fall.

They may be proven right but they cannot be sure.

CIRCLE SCRAWLED

For if a circle has been scrawled around a specific date on a calendar there's only one person who definitely knows.

BRIEF GLIMPSE

The photographs on this page give a brief glimpse of a rarely-seen side of the life of the former Kelowna hardware merchant who has master-minded the running of Canada's Pacific Coast province since Aug. 1, 1952.

Premier Bennett and his Social Credit government have many supporters and many critics. But even his severest political critics acknowledge that Premier Bennett is one of the most astute politicians in Canada today.

SUITS BEST

He will call the next election for a time when it suits the Social Credit cause best.

Opposition members criticize this but it is an accepted political fact of life and is practised by all governments of all shades at all times.

The premier has now fully recovered from kidney stone trouble which had him in hospital for some time earlier this year and took time off from his offical duties recently for a short but restful vacation in Kelowna.

DRAWBACK

One of the drawbacks of being premier of B.C. was the fact that he could not get to Kelowna as often as he would like, Premier Bennett once told a reporter.

"Why not move the capital here?" he was asked jokingly.

"A real visionary!" retorted the premier.

The premier was in Ottawa last week for the Dominion-provincial conference as well as a two-day national Social Credit League convention.

THIS WEEK

He is due to return to Kelowna this week and many pundits feel he will announce an election, possibly on Aug. 3, when the Social Credit party holds a birthday party in the premier's home town to celebrate its eighth year in office.

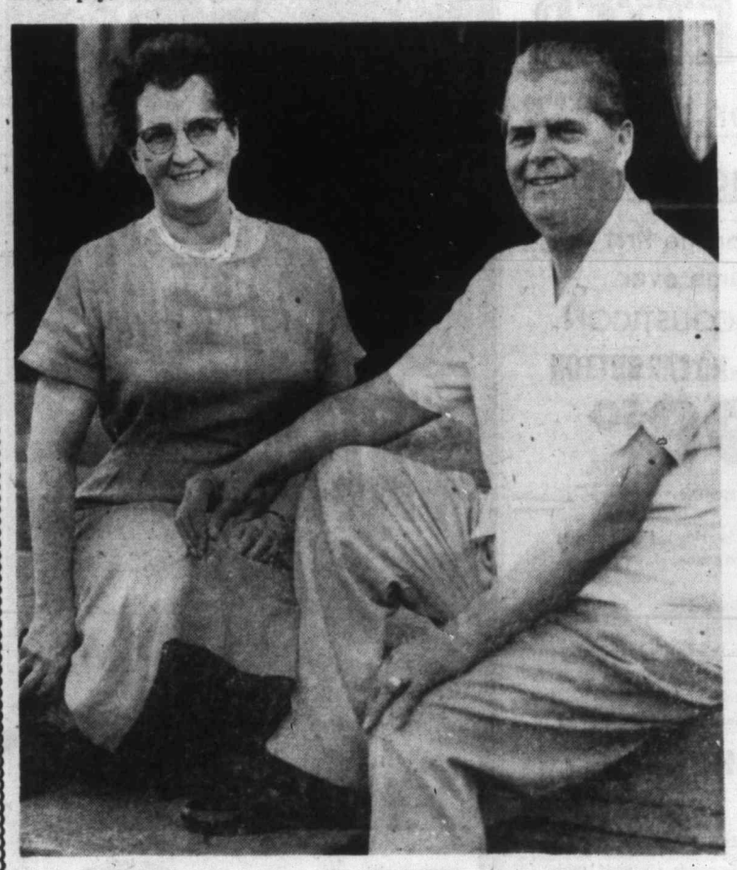

In the last provincial election, in 1956, the Social Credit government won a thumping victory by taking 38 of the legislature's 52 seats, decimating all but the official opposition, the CCF, which won 11 seats.

Nevertheless the CCF, Liberals, and the Progressive Conservatives are all predicting victory for their parties in the coming campaign.

CAN BE TOPPLED

They point to the devastating overthrow of Quebec's Union Nationale party and the Progressive Conservative's ouster from New Brunswick as proof that the strongest governments can be toppled.

Time will tell, whether it can happen here.

Premier, Mrs. Bennett Relax

There comes a time at the close of each day, however, when Premier and Mrs. Bennett like to sit back and relax—away from the affairs of state and people—as the hot Okanagan sun slowly sets for another day. His double-storey home is set in large, beautifully-landscaped grounds. But although the premier relaxes physically his mind is ever active. Chances are he's planning tactics for B.C.'s next election.

PERSONAL MENTION

Mr. and Mrs. J. B. MacLean To Live in Prince George

White gladiolus, carnations and gypsophila decorated St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church last evening for the wedding of June Marilyn, daugter of Mr. and Mrs. Everett Muir Oakley, and Mr. James Blair McLean, son of Rev. Dr. J. L. W. and Mrs. McLean.

The wedding service was performed by the groom's father.

The bride, who walked to the altar with her father, was lovely in a floor-length gown, fashioned of lace and nylon net over white satin. The basque bodice had a scalloped neckline outlined in lace and the lily point sleeves were trimmed with seed pearls. The waistline dropped to a V-front and back to accentuate the fully-hooped skirt.

Lace and iridescent sequins trimmed her finger-tip veil which fell from a tiara of sequins and seed pearls. The bridal bouquet was white carnations and stephanotis.

Mrs. Evan Oakley, matron of honor, and Miss Arlene Bossom, bridesmaid, wore dresses of ice-blue brocaded taffeta, trimmed with cummerbunds and large bows at the back of blue taffeta. Both carried flat baskets filled with pale yellow marguerites.

Mr. John Reid was best man and Rev. Walter McLean, Mr. Terry Varcoe and Mr. Thomas Bourne showed guests to the pews.

At the reception held at the Uplands Golf Club, the bride's table was centred with a three-tiered cake embedded in blue tulle, flanked by silver candelabra and silver bowls filled with white and blue sweetpeas and gypsophila. Mr. J. C. Nimmo proposed the toast.

Leaving to spend a honeymoon in the United States the new Mrs. McLean wore a beige linen suit, bandeau of gold and brown velvet leaves, brown and gold accessories and corsage of Talisman roses.

They will make their home in Prince George, B.C., where both bride and groom are members of the school teaching staff.

North Douglas Tabernacle was the scene of a pretty wedding on Saturday afternoon when Elizabeth Wilhelmina, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. Engel, exchanged nuptial vows with Wilfred Rudolf George Filazek, son of Mr. and Mrs. R. Filazek, Spring Valley, Sask. Rev. P. S. Jones officiated.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore a floor-length gown with full skirt of nylon net with panels of lace at the front and back and the lace bodice embroidered with sequins and pearls at the neckline. Her veil was chapel length and she carried red rosebuds.

The attendants wore street-length dresses of nylon. Mrs. J. Rhodes, matron of honor, was in rose and Miss Jean Engel, the bride's sister, and Miss Gloria Filazek, sister of the groom, were both in blue.

They had white headdresses and carried white and red carnation bouquets.

Mr. Erwin Filazek of Spring Valley was best man for his cousin and Mr. Ken Miller of Winnipeg and Mr. George Machmer of Moose Jaw were ushers.

At a reception in the Orange Hall a three-tiered cake, encircled with red roses, centred the bridal table.

After a honeymoon on Vancouver Island the young couple will go to Spring Valley, where they will reside. The bride's travelling costume was a golden honey brown suit with mint green accessories and yellow rose corsage.

Miss Myrna Morris Weds G. D. Deacon

At a double ring ceremony performed by Rev. Canon George Biddle in St. John's Anglican Church last evening, Myrna Ann Morris was united in marriage with Mr. Gordon David Deacon.

The bride, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Morris, Quadra Street, was given in marriage by her father. She wore a lovely floor length gown of white silk organza and Chantilly lace. The bodice of lace was embroidered with sequins and a tiara of seed pearls held her elbow length veil. Pearl earrings, a gift from the groom, and a bouquet of red rosebuds centred with a gardenia, completed her ensemble.

Mrs. Russell Sigerson, Richmond, B.C., was matron of honor, Mrs. John Emslie, bridesmatron and Miss Joan Stewart, bridesmaid.

The groom, son of Lieut. and Mrs. Harry Deacon of Vancouver, had Mr. Ian Millar as best man.

Mr. Bob Harknett and Mr. Adrien Birtwhistle acted as ushers.

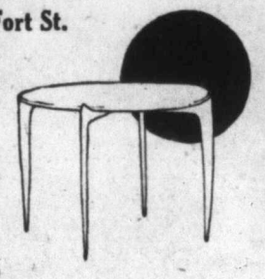

At the reception in Holyrood House the bride's uncle, Mr. Lionel Singlehurst of Vancouver, proposed the toast. The bride's table was centred with a three-tiered cake made by the bride's mother. Pink roses surrounded the cake.

Leaving for a honeymoon in the United States Mrs. Deacon chose a tailored suit of horizon blue, matching flowered hat trimmed with velvet bows and pearl white accessories. Pink Princess roses were in her corsage.

Mr. and Mrs. Deacon will reside at 597 Peto Place.

40 BUSINESS PERSONALS

Dear Di,

I'm so happy I could cry.
I just got the darndest buy.
In fact I went on a buying jag.
Got a blouse, a skirt and a gay handbag!
. . . A frock, with a coat to match.
Trimmed with a brilliant colored sash.
Then went berserk on "jewels" of the sea.
In a truly sparkling saving spree.
I saved 20% on EVERYTHING
Oh—almost forget to say
Was to Karolyn's I went today.
The style shoppe on Estevan.
Do get down there as fast as you can!

Love,
Viv.

SIDING

"Keystone" clear kiln-dried siding is the finest available — a quality material for all applications where perfection is required.

THE LUMBER
Western red cedar lumber is noted for its exceptional durability, light weight and beautiful color, ranging from almost pure white of the narrow sapwood to reddish brown heartwood. It is very easily worked, is free from pitch, takes and holds stains, paints and enamels excellently, and is superior for gluing. Because of these qualities, Western red cedar is especially adaptable for use as bevel siding for quality homes.

DURABILITY

WEATHERING CHARACTERISTICS
Left exposed without paint or other protective finishes, Western red cedar weathers to an intriguing grey color having little or no sheen. It is one of the most stable species of lumber, having very little tendency to cup and pull loose from fastenings when exposed to the weather.

INSULATING QUALITIES
Western red cedar has the highest insulating value of all commonly-used soft woods — another point in its favor as siding, and of particular importance when used as roof decking.

Learned in Minutes

Non-Swimmer Swims And Saves Playmate

HIGHER INCE, England (UPI)—Geoffrey Edwards, 8, learned to swim within minutes Friday and saved the life of his four-year-old playmate. A third boy drowned.

Geoffrey and his pals, Tommy Scott, 4, and Ted Hulcroft, 6, were sailing on a makeshift raft when it turned over, flinging the boys into the water.

Geoffrey bobbed to surface first. This is the story he told:

"I never thought I could swim, but when I fell off the raft something made me try.

"I pushed out my legs and then my arms. I couldn't believe it but I was moving along in the water.

"My first thought was to get Tommy out. He is only a baby and his mother is out at work.

TOMMY DEAD

"I suddenly thought what she would say if she came home from work and I had to tell her 'Your Tommy is dead.'

"I saw Tommy in the water and made towards him. He is very tiny and I managed to get hold of him. The raft was afloat again and had gone into the bank, I lifted Tommy onto the raft and got out of the water.

WOULD HAVE TRIED

"If I could have seen Ted, I would have tried again to swim. But I could not see him and I ran home. I was scared," the youngster said.

Officials said Ted drowned.

PRINCE GEORGE, B.C. (CP)—Lawrence Woiken, 19, of Poplar Grove, Sask., was drowned in the Willow River, about 20 miles east of here, Friday, when he stepped into a deep hole while wading.

A companion, Mike Maloff, 45, almost drowned attempting to save Woiken. Both were working in a sawmill at Giscome, 27 miles east of here.

Trade Official Sees:

Canada Good Market For New Zealand Meat

AUCKLAND, N.Z. (CP) — New Zealand has good prospects of increasing sales of meat to Canada, in the opinion of J. D. Kerr, who has ended a four-year term as New Zealand assistant trade commissioner in Montreal.

New Zealanders, he says eat 230 pounds of meat a head annually, compared with 175 pounds eaten by Canadians. The contrast in mutton and lamb, New Zealand's main meat exports, is even greater.

Kerr says that the annual consumption of mutton and lamb in Canada is only 2.7 pounds a year. New Zealanders eat 76 pounds of these meats annally.

With the rate of population increase in Canada, and campaigns to make Canadians more aware of the virtues of lamb, he believes there is scope for a big increase in sales.

Kerr sees little hope of selling dairy produce in Canada while the present price support system allied to import control continues.

He thinks the chief prospect for increased trade lies in primary and semi-processed products, but sees openings for manufactured goods if price and quality are competitive.

Cuba Marks Martyrs' Day

HAVANA (AP)—Cuba observed revolutionary martyrs' day Saturday with a general suspension of government activity and the closing of most stores. The date has been made a national day of mourning by Prime Minister Fidel Castro's government.

Negro Burial Ground Historical Ontario Site

NIAGARA-ON-THE-LAKE, Ont. (CP) — A Negro burial ground dating back 130 years is being restored by this town's council as a historic site.

Many Negroes came to Canada to escape slavery in the United States in the 19th century and in 1830 a Baptist church was erected at the site of the graveyard.

The church was built largely through the efforts of John Oakley, a former British soldier who, though white, became pastor of the predominantly Negro congregation.

Cement War Materiel

Reds Grab Trucks In Berlin Gambit

BERLIN (UPI) — Isolated West Berlin yesterday faced a new threat to its vital highway links to the west.

The threat was posed by the confiscation of two trailer trucks the Communists said were transporting "war material" to West Germany.

The stoppage raised the fear the Communists might be preparing to interfere with the traffic on the pretext military goods are being carried.

The West Berlin city government denied the trucks carried military supplies. It said they were loaded with asbestos cement.

LONDON (Reuters) — The deputy commander-in-chief of Russia's naval forces said last night that submarines have assumed the greatest importance because of the rapid development of nuclear and rocket weapons.

EDMONTON (CP)—A four-day Jehovah's Witnesses' district convention moved into its third day Saturday with an attendance of 9,361 registered Friday.

Thais Wouldn't Hurt Flies

'Gentle People' Out of Date On Correctional Schemes

VANCOUVER (CP) — Thailanders are such a kind and gentle people that nobody ever hurts anybody in that country, says Hugh Christie, warden of Oakalla Prison Farm.

Mr. Christie has returned from a year's leave of absence as a United Nations penal reform adviser in Thailand.

"Thailanders don't even want to kill mosquitoes although they dislike the insects, but spread the DDT spray on the ground. If the mosquitoes want to eat themselves to death, it is their own fault."

He told of meeting the same deep concern for life in any form and the interesting experience of working with the Thais to find solutions in the implementing of a modern correctional program in Thailand.

"They are truly wonderful people, happy, friendly, and hospitable, but they are so intent on making life a happy experience for everyone that sometimes getting a difficult job done requires ingenuity.

"I wondered during the first two months whether any progress was being made as there was no indication then of the considerable thought they were giving to our discussions.

"However, once they could see their way clear to adopt modern methods . . . they took the initiative."

Mr. Christie said the Thai prison system was inadequate, with prisons terribly overcrowded and sanitary conditions unsatisfactory.

Although no instruments of restrait which would actually hurt were used, leg irons and chains had not yet been eliminated.

But the Thais want to meet western standards and have made a promising start to reform the prison system. Twelve farm and forestry camps have been set up and other measures are being studied.

Coptic Papers Excite Interest

LONDON (Reuters) — Perhaps it is the mystery which still surrounds the Dead Sea scrolls and the Coptic manuscripts recovered from the sands of Upper Egypt that whets so much public interest in them.

Both sets of documents were discovered gradually, and, as it were, accidentally. There was none of the blare of publicity about their uncovering which often attends the discovery of major relics at a new archaelogogical site.

MORE HEARD

Although more has been heard of Dead Sea scrolls and their contents, the 50 or so Coptic manuscripts found in Egypt would appear to be at least equally important.

Like the Dead Sea scrolls, many of these documents are still being, or have yet to be, examined. The work is long and tedious, often entailing the fitting together of fragments of manuscript like a jig-saw puzzle.

FULL STORY

While the full official story of the Coptic documents has yet to be told, unofficial disclosures have given glimpses of their contents.

One, in particular, has caught the public imagination — that claimed to be a Fifth Gospel—"the Gospel according to Thomas."

COMPLETE SURVEY

This claim, together with a complete survey of the circumstances of the discovery of the documents, the philosophy of the Gnostic sects and an appraisal of the significance of the manuscripts to scholars and knowledge of the ancient world, is the subject of a study by the French Egyptologist, Jean Dbresse, the only surviving witness of the events which led to the discovery of the papyri.

THE THOMAS GOSPEL

The book, published now in English translation under the title The Secret Books of the Egyptian Gnostics (Hollis and Carter, London), tells for the first time the full story of the discovery of the manuscripts and includes an English translation and critical evaluation of "The Gospel according to Thomas."

The author describes the texts as "far more revealing and perhaps also of greater historic consequence than those from the Judaean desert."

EXHAUSTIVE STUDY

But, he adds, "as soon as it becomes possible to make an exhaustive study of the 50 or so Gnostic documents lately recovered from the sands of Egypt and when the Qumran (Dead Sea) scrolls have yielded their last secret, we may even discover a more or less tenuous relation between the histories of the two religious movements to which these two finds of manuscripts belonged: the existence of such a link may enhance the interest of both."

Cubans Seize More U.S. Land

NUEVA GERONA, Isle of Pines, Cuba (AP) — Cuban agents have begun seizing American property on Cuba's Isle of Pines. The bulk of a 10,000-acre fruit and cattle development owned by Fred Swetland of Cleveland and Yellow Springs, Ohio, has been taken over. Swetland's family started the development on the island in 1908.

Deaf-Mute Killer

Tragedy Bares Tragedy

ONEIDA, N.Y. (UPI) — Police said yesterday a deaf mute who killed his two small sons and set fire to his house had been under a severe strain from tensions at home resulting from his inability to hear or talk.

Earl Leahey, 29, was arraigned for first-degree murder after admitting in writing and sign language that he had bludgeoned his 11-month-old son Daniel on the head with a hammer, strangled his three-year-old son, Douglas, and then set fire to the modest ranch-style home.

"I've never seen such a tragic case," said Madison County district attorney Spencer Feldman. "Those little children and that poor father."

Firemen called to fight the blaze at the Leahey house found the boys' bodies in their cribs.

"The walls were spattered with blood and there was a blood-stained hammer in one crib," said Fire Chief Raymond Stedding. "We also found a can of lighter fluid and matches spread over the floor in the bedroom where the fire started."

LIGHTNING NEWEST MENACE TO B.C.'S FLAMING FOREST

Flaming Oil Barge Taken in Tow

CAMPBELL RIVER (CP)—The BA Logger, a barge loaded with 50,000 gallons of diesel fuel and 3,000 of gasoline, was being towed toward Vancouver Saturday night from the Campbell River area.

Attempts to extinguish the flames were abandoned by the crew of the tug Betty Anne, owned by Superior Towing, but another boat was en route with fire-fighting equipment.

It's Grand to Be Home with the Family Again

Six weeks of waiting ended yesterday for the Cpl. D. S. MacLeod family, when father came "marching home" along with 150 officers and men of the Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry who have been training at Camp Wainwright, Alberta. A good hug was given to wife, Jean, and son, Bruce, minutes after he arrived by bus.—(Colonist photos.)

A grand welcome greeted Major R. J. Frost on his homecoming yesterday after six weeks training at Camp Wainwright, Alberta. He was greeted by his niece, Leslie Lowe, 4; and sons, Robbie, 6, and Michael, 3. Maj. Frost arrived home with at least 150 officers and men of Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry based at Work Point.

Firefighting Costs Nearing Record

Harassed forest officials already plagued by what may be the worst fire year in B.C. history today face a new and serious threat in the form of forecast lightning storms along the coast and in the already-flaming southern interior.

Up to last night 1960 fire-fighting costs amounted to more than $1,718,000—only a few thousand dollars short of the cost of fighting fires during the same period of 1958, the worst year on record.

4,200 MEN

A forest service spokesman estimated that close to 4,200 men would be on the forest fire lines today. Some 411 fires were still reported burning throughout the province and many were out of control.

Seriousness of the situation yesterday prompted the offer of military personnel from defence Minister G. R. Pearkes, but provincial authorities said there was no shortage of firefighters.

TWO HELICOPTERS

The federal government had already put two large RCAF helicopters at the disposal of the forest service and an urgent request for more was reported under consideration at Ottawa.

"The co-operation of the defence department and the minister of defence has been excellent," Attorney-General Robert Bonner said last night.

USE OF SOLDIERS

A top forest service official said the use of soldiers as firefighters was neither necessary nor desirable.

"We have a plentiful supply of loggers who have been laid off as a result of the fire hazard and the closure of many logging operations, and these men are our best bet—they know their way around in the woods and many of them have had firefighting experience before," he stated.

HITCH-HIKING

Groups of out-of-work loggers have been seen walking and hitchiking to the interior in order to get on the fire lines, the official continued.

"The chance to earn 75 cents an hour and work 12 to 16-hour days looks pretty good to these men right now."

He said the threat of lightning storms, prime cause of forest fires, is the department's greatest worry at the present time.

"It was lightning which started all this. It is not gen-

Cowichan-Newcastle

Socreds Pick Hazel Fee

DUNCAN — Mrs. Hazel Fee, a grandmother and former campaign manager for the late Premier William Aberhart of Alberta in 1929, was last night picked the Social Credit candidate for Cowichan-Newcastle in the next provincial election.

She was voted in after telling a Socred meeting that "we want someone in this riding who is working with instead of sniping at the government from the sidelines . . . or a tree."

FOREIGN POWERS

Mrs. Fee defeated Eugene Beaubien, 58, an IWA shop steward who alleged Opposition Leader Robert Strachan was employed by "foreign powers" to cause dissension between labor and management.

Mr. Strachan presently holds the Cowichan-Newcastle seat in the legislature.

REST HOME

Mrs. Fee, operator of a rest home, said the Socred eight-year record in this province is "so outstanding I find it difficult to see how anyone with the welfare of the province at heart could vote for any other party."

Courthouse 'Definite' In Duncan

DUNCAN — Works Minister W. N. Chant said last night Cowichan will "definitely" be getting a new courthouse.

Mr. Chant would give no idea when it would be started. Two sites have been considered, he said, but would not disclose where they are.

LAST ELECTION

He was asked about the courthouse because at the last provincial election a courthouse was promised by the minister at a rally here.

He also said when the Kinsmen Club here has a "solid proposition" I'm sure the government will be open to it. The club is trying to get title to government land on which the present health unit sits to replace it with a $50,000 structure.

JOHN DIEFENBAKER
. . . witness dream

Saturday Prorogation

Dying Session Will Pass John D's Cherished Bill

OTTAWA (CP)—Parliament's last act this session will be to witness Prime Minister Diefenbaker's cherished dream come true—writing the Bill of Rights into law.

The session is expected to end next Saturday, House Leader Gordon Churchill said.

BASIC RIGHTS

The bill setting forth the basic human rights and fundamental freedoms, will become a statute of the Canadian Parliament. Mr. Diefenbaker believes it is so written that no government would dare try to remove any of its sections.

Despite a unanimous recorded vote of the Commons when it was given second reading—approval in principle—the bill has been subject to more attempts to amend it in committee than any other single piece of legislation presented to Parliament by the Progressive Conservative government.

Justice Minister Fulton, piloting the bill for the prime minister in committee, warded off most of the proposed amendments on grounds that spelling out specific things in specific language restricts the "generality" of the bill's provisions.

Once the bill becomes law, however, it is expected to give rise to many years of detailed work for Canada's Parliamentarians. The bill instructs the courts to interpret all the statute law of Canada passed since 1867 or from now on so as to uphold the basic freedoms and rights.

The bill is therefore made paramount to all other federal legislation and, as one legal source put it, will drive an ox-cart through hundreds of laws and legal interpretations. A witness before the special committee said one Toronto lawyer expects to retire on the profits he makes in litigation arising out of the bill.

The government has been reluctant to enumerate the Acts of Parliament it expects will be found in conflict with the Bill of Rights.

Red Leader Drops Hint Of New Sub

LONDON (AP)—The deputy commander of Soviet naval forces said Saturday the Soviet Union now has submarines "capable of dealing powerful blows not only against enemy navies, but also against objectives situated on remote enemy territory."

The announcement may have been designed to counter the disclosure that the U.S. Navy last week successfully test-fired two Polaris missiles, which can carry atomic warheads, from the submerged submarine George Washington.

Golovko did not specifically claim that the Soviet has a new weapon rivaling the U.S. missile.

Storms Lash Eastern U.S.

NEW YORK (AP) — Slashing rain driven by high winds buffeted the east coast Saturday as tropical storm Brenda moved along the seaboard and headed for the St. Lawrence Valley.

Long-Tranquil Rhodesia Erupts Into Battleground

SALISBURY, Southern Rhodesia (Reuters) — African demands for political rights have turned Southern Rhodesia from a settled and trouble-free country into a battleground between black and white.

Less than two weeks ago, the self-governing British colony was going all out to aid hundreds of refugees swarming across the borders of the Rhodesian federation from the troubled Congo republic. The Central African Federation is composed of Southern Rhodesia and the protectorates of Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland.

Today, jails are filled with Africans, huge areas of African townships are burned-out ruins, 11 Africans are dead.

Hardly an office in Salisbury or Bulawayo is not understaffed because white reservists were called up into the territorial army. Housewives stay alone at home at night while their husbands are on duty as police reservists.

In trying to keep order, Southern Rhodesia's police broke a 64-year-old record—no African killed by the forces of law.

It was the preoccupation of Southern Rhodesia's Prime Minister Sir Edgar Whitehead, with the welfare of refugees from the Congo, which helped spark the trouble.

He said he was too busy to meet leaders of the African National Democratic Party who wanted to submit a list of grievances. As unrest grew, he had them arrested, sparking riots and looting.

Disclosure of Secret Report

Liberals Make It Clear They Will Never Forgive John D

OTTAWA (CP)—The Liberals have made it clear they will never forgive Prime Minister Diefenbaker for what they call his "disgraceful public performance" in disclosing a report submitted in confidence to the Liberal government.

They hammered away at this point in the Commons for hours yesterday, pressing Labor Minister Starr to disclose to parliament the forthcoming winter unemployment situation indicated in new confidential economic reports given the Conservative government.

Mr. Starr refused. He said that to make a confidential report public would be to break a confidence.

The reference was to the "Canadian economic outlook" reports for each year, which J. W. Pickersgill (L., Bonavist-Twillingate) said are prepared by civil service economists for use by the government of the day in mapping economic policy.

Opposition leader Pearson recalled that Mr. Diefenbaker on Jan. 20, 1958, found the report submitted to the Liberal government a year earlier "tore off the page marked confidential, selected certain passages from it for partisan purposes," tabled it in the Commons "and that was that."

"A disgraceful public performance," said Mr. Pickersgill. "Shocking."

"The prime minister saw fit, for political purposes, for partisan purposes . . . to use a document which belonged to the previous government and which he had no constitutional right to make public at all.

"It was a performance which I do not think would happen in any other British parliament anywhere in the world and I did not expect it to happen here."

Letters to the Editor

The Second Driver

Mr. Ealdhelm-White states that he has 'many times come up to a column of traffic, travelling between 25 and 30 miles in a 50 or 60 zone."

Therefore the second driver in the column must have been satisfied with the speed of the driver of the leading car, and so is equally guilty.

In 35 years of driving in Saanich and elsewhere, the writer has never considered the white single or double line to be the cause of car parades on the open highway.

The second driver should either pass or fall back at least 100 feet to allow the third car to pass into second place.

Effortless Income

That was a nice composite list of hard-working wage and salary workers published by the revenue department on taxation statistics (Colonist, July 28). But sticking out like a sore thumb was a "paid group" called investors, people whose incomes are derived through ownership, not effort.

To the multitude of the brainwashed, modern society is confusing enough. Why add to it?

Oak Bay Tradition

A political report in the Colonist for July 29 uses the words "traditionally Liberal" in describing Oak Bay.

From 1871 until 1940 Victoria elected a Conservative federally and the area comprising the present Oak Bay municipality gave Conservative majorities even when it was part of Nanaimo in the days of the late Mr. Dickie.

Provincially Oak Bay came into being in 1938 and was represented by a Conservative until 1952, some 14 years. In the last federal election the Conservative vote was the greatest in the history of the riding.

If tradition is to be the measure, Oak Bay is Conservative.

Americans on Sugar Island look across to Canada for help.

Cut-Off U.S. Island

They Want to Join Canada

By PETER WARD
Telegram News Service

Canada's high standard of living and the booming economy of Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., is luring a 200-square-mile border island in the St. Mary's River away from the United States.

It's probably the first time in history an American possession has been ready to trade the Stars and Stripes for the Union Jack.

That's what the citizens of Sugar Island are anxious to do, unless Michigan State can match Ontario's services, and town fathers in the American Soo can match the progressive ways of their Canadian neighbors on the river's other side.

The 300 permanent residents on Sugar Island want free ferry service, state roads and a telephone service for a beginning.

"If we don't get better communications," said John D. Hamilton, chairman of the citizens' committee, "we'd like to become part of Canada. More than two-thirds of the islanders are with me on this."

In Ottawa, Northern Affairs Minister Hamilton said Canada would be interested in buying Sugar Island from the U.S., but would first like to know the price and look the place over.

He said the matter hadn't officially come to the government's attention yet.

"If we don't get some action, it will," threatened Gil Nelson, chairman of the businessmen's committee. "We've got to do something."

Sugar Island lies less than a mile below both cities. It is 11 miles wide and 23 miles long. In the 1890s, before the ship canal was built, water between the American mainland and Sugar Island was so shallow residents could drive horses across. Some say a footbridge there was torn down by the canal builders.

Now the gap between the island and the mainland is perhaps 300 yards. It costs 85 cents each way for a car and two persons to make the ferry trip.

On the Canadian side, Sugar Island so close to the mainland in places, even an amateur golfer could drive a ball across dry.

A few miles downstream, Canadian St. Joseph's Island enjoys free Canadian ferry service, and hence has a far greater population and a thriving tourist business.

"How can Canada, with only 18,000,000 people, give St. Joe's a free ferry, when the U.S., with 180,000,000, can't afford one for us?" said Mr. Nelson.

The drastic request to be sold or given to Canada came soon after Sugar Island residents were disappointed by being left out of plans for the new St. Mary's Bridge, to be built over the ship canal, north of the locks.

Nelson claims the bridge could have been built for several millions less at Sugar Island. He is an official adviser to the bridge authority and has never been called for advice.

Next move for the islanders may be an attempt to get an injunction stopping the construction of the $18,000,000 bridge. Work is scheduled to start this fall.

Nelson claims planning for the bridge was illegally done.

There are about 75 miles of road on the island, of which less than 10 miles are paved. In places metal culverts jut eight inches above the gravel roads.

The only telephone is a U.S. Coast Guard line from the south end to the north, not used by civilians except in emergency.

For 300 people, the island's services are perhaps adequate, but in summer tourists swell the population to nearly 2,000. In the last 10 years, according to Mr. Nelson, more than 100 permanent residents have moved from the island because of isolation.

"You can't stand still," Nelson said. "Unless you progress, you'll die. If we can't change their indifference, then joining Canada is the only way we'll get ahead, and I'm all for it."

Letter to Khushchev

Pride and Foreboding

By DUART FARQUHARSON
From London

A surprised Britain has greeted with pride the thousand remarkable words in which Prime Minister Harold Macmillan has put so well its collective feelings about "the present sad state of the world." In foreboding suspense it awaits Mr. Khrushchev's reply.

The prime minister's personal letter to the Soviet ruler is not as unprecedented a diplomatic step as some observers believe. For the past year the two leaders have been exchanging private notes which have never leaked to the press. This time Mr. Macmillan chose to make public his letter for obvious propaganda reasons.

The government here believes that Mr. Khrushchev placed real value on this single line of frank communication between East and West His reply—not the substance of it, which is unlikely to reverse recent statements, but its tone — will indicate whether he still does.

Should it be harsh and unyielding, Mr. Khrushchev will in effect be slamming the door on communication and co-existence. Such a reply would mean that Soviet policy has been reversed, the Foreign Office believes, either on Mr. Khrushchev's own initiative or because domestic pressures have swung him round.

The threats and accusations that the Soviet leader has recently swung in every direction raise the question whether there is not, as Mr. Macmillan put it in his message, "a new trend in the conduct of Soviet foreign policy." For the British government much of the answer will depend on the words chosen by Mr. Khrushchev in making his reply.

Looked at in this light Mr. Macmillan's letter is not so much a new initiative as the last step of the initiative the prime minister began last year when he visited Moscow.

It would be wrong to say the prime minister is trying to regain for Britain the leadership of the Western alliance, though he may not be adverse to giving some Englishmen that impression. Mr. Macmillan has long been occupied — pre - occupied, some would say—with the danger of slipping into war needlessly. He believes that the First World War, which he fought in, could have been prevented. The situation now, he fears, is not entirely dissimilar.

In his letter to Mr. Khrushchev he in effect says, "You're in danger of going too far with your sabre-rattling. Lay off now before it's too late." Putting his message in a dramatic, personal way, he hopes to bring home the point: "Take it from me, whatever you or your advisers think, this is what the West itself believes."

One Member Thinks So

By DON HANRIGHT
Canadian Press

Several MPs held a mirror to Parliament last week, and disagreed on what they saw.

Harshest criticism came from Douglas Fisher (CCF, Port Arthur) who described the Canadian institution as senile. "I think we are a living example of cultural lag," he said.

As Mr. Fisher saw it, a major problem is that Canadian MPs come from varying backgrounds and the Commons does "not have the kind of person focussing into it as in some other parliaments."

United States senators and congressmen were much more educated to a full-time political career. In Britain the MPs seemed to have a common educational background and aspiration.

Mr. Fisher said the Commons is still acting as if this were the mid-19th century. He spoke of a "latent crisis" in the way Parliament is run in this country and called for a new approach to make it the forum which he and other MPs think it should be.

They and others spoke during the Commons study of estimates for legislation—the one time that Speaker Roland Michener answers for a department on the voting of money.

Mr. McCleave pounced on the CCF member's reference to a "cultural lag" and described it as a term popular among social scientists.

"It indicates a feeling on the part of those who use this argument that Parliament should be as bright and shiny as next year's model car with souped-up horsepower, covered with chrome and completely geared for all the vicissitudes of life in the 20th century."

At the risk of "pressing young and presumptuous" views on the Commons, Mr. McCleave, 38, added:

". . . My idea is that the people are quite content to have an institution that has about it a faint odor of mothballs, one that does not show signs of becoming a factory with modern and swift assembly lines and the use of automation. I think they prefer Parliament to be perhaps a little bit slower than the fast pace of the 20th century."

Mr. Regier said it would be a sad day if Parliament were to be governed by experts.

"If there is something radically wrong with the institution of Parliament or the members who compose Parliament, it is my opinion there is something radically wrong with the Canadian electorate, because I am convinced that we in this chamber are no more and no less than the people of Canada as a whole."

He added at another point:

"I do not like the inference that those who may be elected to this House do not deserve to be here. I have a tremendous respect for the right of the people to send here whoever they darn well please."

"My idea of Parliament is that it should be composed of people who have achieved some position in the community—I do not necessarily mean in a money way—people who have done some service of some kind in business or otherwise and who therefore have something to contribute when they come to this House.

"If members of Parliament become sheer professionals I believe we will lose a lot, and Parliament will be composed more and more of people who come here to make a living."

Through the entire debate ran one theme, especially from the opposition—too much committee and house work piled up in the tail end of every session, and not enough time for MPs to do their work properly.

"Surely we are adult enough in this country for members to sit down and decide to make better use of our time and facilities," said Arnold Peters (CCF, Timiskaming).

Nixon Personality

Turn Minus to Plus

By ARTHUR EDSON
(Associated Press)

Whenever distressing news reaches Vice-President Richard Nixon, he may look it over carefully, acknowledge its gloomy character, and then thoughtfully say something like this:

"It's too early to say if this is a plus or a minus."

Although he never intended it this way, it may be a tipoff on his amazing career.

No other U.S. public figure has been able to take a minus and change it to a plus so successfully as Richard Milhous Nixon.

Not since the earliest days of the U.S. republic has the vice-presidency been looked upon as anything but a one-way ticket to political oblivion. Only the death of a president could save him from complete obscurity.

Yet Nixon was able to smash this tradition so irrevocably that he had the delegates roped and branded before they ever assembled.

Although Nixon, especially in his past, has been able to stir up tremendous hates, even his best friends will agree he doesn't create tremendous enthusiasms. The reason lies deep in the man himself.

Basically, Nixon is extremely shy.

Although he does a good job at shaking hands, at throwing in the thoughtful word to show he's alert to what's being said, he doesn't act like a man who thinks this is the pleasantest way to spend an evening.

Nor is he especially moving on the platform, even though he usually attracts excellent crowds.

Nixon won because long ago he knew where he wanted to go, charted a course that would get him there, and then persistently followed it.

Few people plan ahead like Nixon.

If possible, each speech, including those that appear to be off-the-cuff, is carefully worked out. Each move is carefully premeditated.

Nanaimo Trims Victoria; Last Hope Finally Gone

NANAIMO (Special)—Sticking strictly to lacrosse and playing it as well as they have all season, Nanaimo's veterans powered their way into the Inter-City Lacrosse League playoffs here last night with a 20-13 victory over Victoria.

Nanaimo	28	14	13	1	292	298	29
VICTORIA	28	5	19	1	263	313	17

Next game, Tuesday: VICTORIA at Vancouver.

Beaten, 14-10, in a brawling, penalty-ridden game Wednesday in Victoria, Nanaimo left no doubt last night that they intended to settle the playoff question once and for all. After giving up the first goal to Tom Collett, Nanaimo piled up a 9-2 lead and finished with the highest goal total of any team this season.

HARD CORE

And it was the hard core of "tough guys" who battered Vics on Wednesday that outplayed them last night. Skip MacKay had two goals and four assists; Tom McVie had three goals and two assists; Don Ashbee had four goals (he now has 48 for the season) and Jack Bionda three goals and two assists to bring his league-leading total to 63-45—108. Don Sherry, another of the veterans, chipped in with three goals, and Arnie Dugan had a goal and five assists.

Stu Smith, Ron Jay, Whitey Severson, Doug Flynn and Tom Collett each scored twice for Victoria.

Fred Fulla broke Vics in the early stages, kicking out five ticketed shots in the first quarter after Vics had gone ahead, 1-0. Meanwhile, Nanaimo poured 14 shots at Geordie Johnston, Ashbee got three goals and Sherry two to make it 5-1 and pull the club out of reach.

After the whirlwind first half, with Nanaimo ahead by seven goals, the game broke wide open. Both clubs payed little attention to defence, and scored 11 goals apiece in the next 30 minutes. Four of Victoria's goals came on power plays, but Nanaimo practically nullified that by scoring twice while shorthanded.

Johnston, a standout, had to block 40 shots compared to 29 for Fulla. Chummy Crabbe played most of the final quarter for Nanaimo and stopped eight shots.

Rough play also took over in the last quarter, when Ashbee and Tom English of Victoria had a slugfest that ended with Ashbee throwing English' gloves high into the stands.

For Victoria, there remains just two games with Vancouver. Vics finish their season at home Wednesday, "Trophy Night" at Memorial Arena.

Braves Gain on Pittsburgh As Burdette Homers in 11th

Pitcher Lew Burdette slammed his first home run of the season in the top of the 11th inning last night to give Milwaukee Braves an 8-7 victory over Los Angeles Dodgers and move them within two games of Pittsburgh Pirates in the National League.

Burdette had come in for Milwaukee as its fourth pitcher in the ninth inning. He blanked the Dodgers in the ninth and 10th, sent Milwaukee out in front in the 11th, and stopped the Dodgers in the bottom of the inning for his 11th victory of the season.

A total of eight home runs were hit in the game. Del Crandall, Bill Bruton, Felix Mantilla, Joe Adcock and Burdette hit them for the Braves, while Tommy Davis hit two and Frank Howard one, his 17th, for the Dodgers.

BIG CROWD

There were 81,544 fans in Los Angeles Coliseum.

Victory came after the Pirates had been beaten, 6-1, by the Chicago Cubs in a day game featuring the seven-hit pitching of Glen Hobbie. Hobbie rushed his expectant wife to hospital, hurried to the park, and found out midway in the game he was the father of a 6¾-pound boy, their first child. His control was unaffected, as he helped the Cubs snap an eight-game losing streak.

San Francisco Giants, on the move again at last, beat Cincinnati Redlegs, 2-1, on a 10th-inning single by Jim Davenport for their ninth win in 12 games. In the other National League game, Larry Jackson of St. Louis became the league's second 13-game winner as the Cardinals whipped Philadelphia, 6-3.

Chicago White Sox moved back into first place in the American League, beating Washington Senators, 3-2, in 11 innings while New York Yankees were rained out at home against Kansas City.

Billy Pierce, appearing as a relief pitcher for the first time this season, won his 10th game for the Sox with the help of an error by Washington's Reno Bertoia. Luis Aparicio opened the 11th with a double, took third on Nellie Fox' bunt single, and scored when Bertoia bobbled Roy Sievers' ground ball at third base.

Sievers had hit his 19th homer off rookie Don Lee in the sixth, but Washington tied the score in the ninth.

Baltimore Orioles sneaked within 3½ games of the Sox, beating Cleveland Indians, 4-3, on Jim Busby's single with two out in the ninth inning.

Chuck Estrada won his 11th for the Orioles although touched for 10 hits, including Marty Keough's two-run homer in the eighth.

VIEWS of SPORT

By Red Smith

LONDON—Harry Levene said there was this girl he knew from Scotland, a Highland lassie with no interest whatever in fist fighting, though she did admire golf and probably would look kindly on the grand old game of tossing the caber, wherein brawny Highlanders hoist a small telegraph pole and heave it for distance like a javelin.

"Anyhow," Mr. Levene said, "I was telling her what a fine, sweet, modest boy Patterson was and how keen I was to see Floyd win. Evidently it captured her interest, because she sat up until 3.30 a.m. to hear the fight on her wireless.

"Remember the good right hand Ingemar landed in the second round? Well, this girl was listening and she rocked back like Patterson when the punch landed—and ricked her neck. She's still taking treatments from a doctor."

Which seems to prove rather conclusively that the Hammer of Thor hasn't lost all its destructive force, after all. To be sure, the blow had no visible effect on Patterson except to make him cautious for about a minute, but a man who can throw a punch in the Polo Grounds and give a lady a pain in the neck 3,000 miles away, he's still a belter to be reckoned with. Of course, the captious might reply that the dimpled beast of prey from Goteburg had always been noted more as a lady-killer than a man-eater.

One-Punch Fighter

"In my judgment," Mr. Levene said, "Johansson brought off a monumental fraud on the boxing public. He is a one-punch fighter with nothing but that right hand. In the first bout he caught Floyd with a lucky punch and then didn't know how to finish him. But didn't he have a wizard year for himself as champion?"

Harry Levene's opinions in this area should be taken with reservations, for he is not an unbiased observer and doesn't pretend to be. He promotes fights in London in bitter competition with his former fishmonger who has had diplomatic relations with Jim Norris and Madison Square Garden. In the eyes of Cus D'Amato, Patterson's knightly proprietor, this automatically establishes Solomons as an obsolete haddock and Levene as the cuddliest nobleman of the realm.

As a result of the Levene-D'Amato entente, any business that Patterson might do in Great Britain as champion would be handled by Harry. Though Floyd takes a dim view of the Wright brothers' experiments at Kittyhawk, he has consented to fly to Sweden Aug. 8 for 10 exhibitions in Johansson's homeland and Norway. D'Amato, who lumps Lindbergh in the same barrel with Norris, will follow by ship and then he and Floyd will visit London, Paris, and Rome.

Here they will be guests of Levene, whose dream is to promote a heavyweight championship match and he doesn't care where.

"I've been in this business more than 40 years," Levene said. "As a kid in the East End I won the championship of London at six-stone-ten (94 pounds), and had my nose broken and never had it fixed. As a manager I was with Jock McAvoy—he had polio, by the way, but still is a powerful man from the waist up and doing well with a caravan camp, what you'd call a trailer park—and I was with Jackie Kid Berg and Ted Kid Lewis and any number of others.

He Whipped Carnera

"I've never promoted a heavyweight championship, although once—well, it was back when Jack Sharkey was champion. I had Larry Gains, a big Canadian who came over on a cattle boat and knocked out national champions all over the continent. He gave Primo Carnera his first whipping in England, at the White City before 60,000 people.

"Jimmy Johnston, who was promoting in New York then, invited us over to fight Ernie Schaaf and then Sharkey. I demanded a guarantee, percentage, and steamship tickets, and Jimmy wired, 'God never guarantees.' I didn't think we'd get any the best of it and we were doing all right here. So Carnera fought Schaaf, who died after the bout, and then Primo got Sharkey and the championship."

This was over tea and scones. Wistfully, Mr. Levene polished off a cherry tart and departed. Later that evening, a little before closing time, there was some small boxing talk with the innkeeper of the Duke of Albemarle, an ancient and charming Mayfair pub.

"Just a moment," the innkeeper said when some question of fact arose, and from under the bar he brought Nat Fleischer's "Ring Record Book." Proudly he displayed the flyleaf, with a personal inscription from the author.

So Nat Fleischer was here, too. It happens everywhere—in Fiji, Tasmania, Bangkok, and the Duke of Albemarle. What ever happened to Kilroy?

Burnaby Boys Make Final

VANCOUVER (CP) — East Burnaby moved into the B.C. Babe Ruth baseball final against Victoria Saturday night, defeating North Vancouver, 2-1, in their seven-inning semi-final at Capilano Stadium.

Burnaby, earlier winners over Penticton, will meet Victoria in the final today. Victoria entered the final Friday with a 6-0 victory over Vancouver.

Russia Predicts Olympic Victory

MOSCOW (AP)—The deputy chairman of the Soviet Olympic committee Saturday predicted Russia would come out on top in the Rome Olympics.

"If you ask me why, I must say it is because I want to win," said A. S. Peslyak, the deputy chairman. "I do not underestimate the strength of the United States team which is unquestionable.

"The American team is very strong, but it will have rivalry from our team. If there were no joint (East and West) German team, Americans would sleep better.

"And we had better not forget the Australians, British and the Scandinavians."

Peslyak predicted a series of record-breaking performances at Rome. He said the Russians were very eager to go to Rome in order to compete against top athletes and to renew their friendships with foreign friends.

Gene Littler Beats Rain, Holds Lead

BALTIMORE (AP) — Gene Littler of Singing Hills, Calif., slogged his way to a one-over-par 73 Saturday in the backwash of tropical storm Brenda and still managed to hold doggedly to a one-stroke lead through three rounds of the Eastern Open golf tournament.

Littler's 54-hole total of 206 was a step ahead of Al Besselink of Grossinger, N.Y.; Frank Boynton of Orlando, Fla., and Jackie Burke of Kiamesha, N.Y.

The trio pulled up behind Littler by breaking the suddenly tough par of Pine Ridge. Burke and Besselink each shot 71 and Boynton had 70.

The final round of the tourney for $25,000 in awards will be played today by the 60 pros who scored 220 or less. Among those who failed to make the cut was Dave Ragan, the defending champion from Orlando, with 222.

Nanaimo, with George Ellis batting 25, was all out at 106. Five C's then scored 107 for five wickets, with Steve Price contributing 36 runs.

Incogs have already clinched the league title

Idaho Fire Area Crash

City Pilot Killed In Water Bombing

First Flight Was Made As Observer

A 25-year-old Victoria pilot was one of three men who died instantly Wednesday in the crash of a B-25 water bombing plane in the Hells Canyon area of Idaho.

Peter Jeffrey, 25, born in Victoria and formerly of 1751 Cedar Hill Crossroad, was on the bombing mission as an observer to familiarize himself with the specialized flying techniques necessary in fire fighting. It was his first flight in a B-25.

PAST TWO YEARS

For the past two years, he had made his home in Boise, Idaho, with his wife, the former Diane Roskelly of Victoria. He was a pilot for Pacific Intermountain Securities operating out of Boise.

SURVIVORS

Traditional Scottish Dances, Games Draw 1,100

Some 1,100 spectators turned out for the 23rd Highland Games, held for the first time this year at Victoria High School. Officials said cinder track drew many fine athletes for track meet, but despite record entry in dancing and piping, attendance wasn't up to expectations. Bad weather helped thin crowd.—(Colonist photo.)

Biting Wind Whips, Chills Scots' Knees

A biting wind whipped the kilts and chilled the knees of Scots who came from as far away as Winnipeg and Texas for the 23rd annual Highland Gathering held here yesterday.

Inclement weather undoubtedly contributed to the disappointing crowd of some 1,100 who watched a full day's program staged for the first time this year on Victoria High School grounds.

Despite this, however, Victoria Highland Games' Association president Robbie Robinson said last night it was a successful day.

A record entry of more than 200 in the dancing and piping sections drew competitors from up-Island, the lower mainland, Edmonton, and the western states as far south as Palo Alto, Calif.

BIGGEST TURNOUTS

The biggest turnout of track stars in the history of the games included four B.C. members of Canada's team going to the Rome Olympics.

It was mainly to obtain use of a cinder track that the annual games was moved from Macdonald Park. Officials said yesterday they considered the move justified by the turnout of top athletes this year.

MEET EXPENSES

The gate isn't expected to meet expenses for the annual gathering. Mr. Robinson said officials had hoped for a bigger turnout. But he stressed the financial success of the meet wasn't the prime aim of the association—"we are here to provide a setting for our youngsters to prove themselves, both in dancing and piping and track and field."

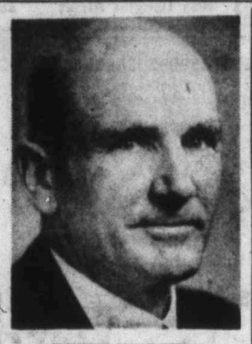

He said the annual event is "Victoria's biggest outdoor show" and warrants the support of local residents. It already is a big tourist draw.

Dancing judges this year were John Hind of Los Angeles and C. Stewart Smith of San Francisco.

Reeve Seeks Views

REEVE WURTELE
. . . one complaint

Reaction of Esquimalt ratepayers to the proposed scheme for a $400,000 ice rink-sports arena is being sought by Reeve A. C. Wurtele.

The reeve said last night reaction so far to the explanatory pamphlets mailed Thursday to all property owners in the municipality has been "very good."

ONE COMPLAINT

Only one complaint has been received. Mr. Wurtele said the person objected to it as "too grand a scheme" and added the curling rink should not be made part of the scheme "at the people's expense."

"The council wouldn't want to moidify the scheme at all," the reeve said.

"I don't think the people need be alarmed. It's certainly an ambitious scheme—$400,000 is a lot of money. But it's not too ambitious for our youngsters and for Greater Victoria."

REVENUE PRODUCER

Mr. Wurtele said exhaustive studies made by council showed the curling rink would produce revenue needed to make operation of the arena profitable.

Financial soundness of the scheme is supported, the reeve pointed out, by fact that the $400,000 bylaw which goes to a vote Aug. 13 was approved in principle by the department of municipal affairs.

"If it were not so," he added, "the department would never have sanctioned holding of the referendum."

$40,000 YEAR

Mr. Wurtele said council estimated annual cost of operating the arena would amount to some $40,000 and "certainly we will take in more than that amount."

It would be operated by a manager and maintenance man under direction of an arena commission. The commission would also control operation of concessions to increase revenue.

FIRM PRICES

Firm prices have been obtained from both firms interested in building the arena, but no figures have been made public yet.

Mr. Wurtele said a completion date of Feb. 1, 1961, he regarded as "very optimistic," and added it would probably be a "little later than that."

Logans

Winery Order Filled

A force of 500 pickers descended on the loganberry vines of Saanich late this week to fill a winery order of more than 250 tons of berries.

Having filled quotas to mainland jam manufacturers and frozen food packing houses, growers turned their attention to this final phase of the loganberry season.

FULLY RIPE

Saanich Fruit Growers' President Herbert Bickford said last night the berries had to be fully ripened before sale to the winery.

"The heat wave has not affected the quality of the berries," Mr. Bickford said, "but they are smaller." He said temperatures in the picking areas were up to as far as 110 degrees. "Today (Saturday) was a good day for the pickers."

At Festival

Victoria Night Aug. 12

What may grow into a regular "Victoria night" at the Vancouver International Festival will be launched this year Aug. 12.

A special bus-boat-air lift has been organized to take a party from the city to Queen Elizabeth Theatre for a performance of the Peking Opera. Cost, including transportation, dinner aboard the government ferry, theatre and return by air is $15.75. Tickets are available at Featherstone Travel Service Ltd.

The party will be led by Mayor Percy Scurrah and Mrs. Scurrah and will be greeted by Vancouver Mayor Tom Alsbury. It was organized by local members of the Vancouver Festival Society.

PARKSVILLE—In addition to the top prize of $50, an award of $100 is being made by Parksville Kinsmen Club to Miss Pat Gamble, winner of the "Miss Parksville 1960" title in the recent beauty contest here.

Miss Gamble was sponsored by the Kinsmen Club in the contest and the aditional award is to go towards travelling expenses and for spending money when she goes to Vancouver to represent this district in the "Miss PNE" contest next month. The club will also send her a corsage each day she is in Vancouver.

Workers, Materials

Help on the Way For Fire Victims

Help is on the way for the Crampton family of four left homeless by fire Friday. There was no insurance.

A work party will take the first steps in building a new home for the family today, but they need a bulldozer.

Roy Tutte one of the organizers of the party said last night they didn't want the machine to dig a basement just to scrape the gravel off and blade down to the clay.

PEOPLE WONDERFUL

He said people were wonderful in their response to help. "A lumber truck from Mitchell and Anderson of Sidney dropped a load off on the property even before the committee decided to go ahead and build again," he said.

The old home will be left standing to be taken down at the owner's leisure. "The important thing is to get a place put together for them to live in," Mr. Tutte said.

NUMBER DONATIONS

A number of donations have already come in for the Crampton Fund. The family have enough emergency clothing to take care of their present needs, "but there's always next month," Mr. Tutte said.

In charge of the fund are N. T. Wright, fire chief G. A. Gardner and Roy Tutte. Cheques should be made out to the Crampton Fund and mailed to P.O. Box 568 Sidney or the Sidney branch of the Bank of Montreal. People with goods, materials, equipment, clothing or furniture to donate should call GR 5-1421 or GR 5-2760 regarding their gifts.

Mr. Tutte suggested that Victorians interested in the fund might leave their donations at Goodwill Enterprises, 560 Yates Street.

Ring Found In Wreckage

It wasn't all bad that came out of the fire that destroyed the home of the Crampton family of 820 Towner Park Road, North Saanich, Friday.

A group of men combing the wreckage for salvage yesterday found Mrs. Sheila Crampton's engagement ring.

Missing Toddler Found Drowned In Somass River

ALBERI—The body of Thomas James, two-and-a-half-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Leonard James, was found Saturday morning in Somass River, some 14 hours after the toddler was missed from his grandmother's home on Second Indian Reserve here.

A search by residents of the reserve was joined by RCMP at about 8.45 p.m. Friday and later in the night the RCMP tracking dog was brought from Parksville to aid in the hunt.

LAKE COWICHAN — A petition is being circulated here to oppose the civic holiday Aug. 13 for the annual sports day and celebrations.

The petition is to be taken to the August meeting of the village council, which may be held this week. Businessmen claim too much money would be lost, considering that they already close on Mondays.

Firemen Gathering

ALBERNI — Volunteer firemen from all over Vancouver Island are congregating in Alberni for the annual fire-fighting competitions to be held Sunday.

Rogers' Creek Park has been converted into a camping ground for the firemen and their families. One hundred and fifty men are expected to compete in the various events.

ALBERNI — Larry Ivanick, Port Alberni, was fined $30 and costs in Alberni court Saturday after an accident in which his car rolled over and crashed through a fence on River Road. Damage was estimated at $700 but no one was injured.

DUNCAN — Two cars were damaged a total of $350 in an accident at Norcross and Bell-McKinnon Roads just north of here.

Latter, pulling away from a stop sign heading west on Norcross Road, failed to see the other car that was in a dip on Bell-McKinnon Road to his left.

DUNCAN — Felix Page, a Cowichan Indian, was fined $10 yesterday for being impaired off the reserve. He pleaded guilty. Police said he caused a fight in an all-night cafe and damaged a record player.

Troller Blistered

CAMPBELL RIVER — Side of a Vancouver fishing troller was blistered after a flash fire occurred while the vessel was being fueled at Standard Oil Marina here.

PENDER ISLAND — Victoria and District zone council of the Canadian Legion wants the provincial government to include wives of war veterans' allowance recipients and their widows for medical benefits as are granted under the old age pension act.

The council, which met at Port Washington here, unanimously voted to ask the provincial command for "vigorous action" to secure these benefits.

PARKSVILLE — Combined efforts of Parksville Kinsmen Club and the Community Park Society have ensured the Community Hall will have a new roof in the near future.

Irving Sheet Metal Works of Parksville has the contract for the job and assistance will be given by volunteer work parties from the Kinsmen Club. The cost of approximately $1,500 will be shared equally by the Kinsmen Club and the Community Society.

NANAIMO—Mayor Pete Maffeo said Friday the federal government's decision to construct a new boat basin here will mean a new industry for the city. He said some 300 fishermen likely will make their headquarters here when the facilities are provided.

Olympic Fund Gift Far from Definite

Finance committee chairman Ald. Arthur Dowell said yesterday he had no idea if city council would consider making a contribution to the Olympic fund. He denied earlier reports quoting him as saying council might look favorably on a request for a donation to make up the shortage of $30,000 in the fund to send B.C. athletes to Rome.

"I said council has never been asked for a grant," said Ald. Dowell. "But I wouldn't care to make any further comment because I don't know if we have the money for it."

He was commenting on statement that Olympic fund officials are seeking more donations from Victorians. A spokesman said there have been a few local donations so far and city council has given nothing.

Vancouver gave $4,000 left over from the British Empire Games held there in 1954.

Anyone wishing to contribute should send donations to the Treasurer, B.C. Amateur Sports Council, University Endowment Lands, Vancouver.

Program Ends Wednesday — Big Field Sports Day

Playground Attendance Tops 40,000

Total attendance at city park playgrounds this summer is expected to top 40,000 when the six-week program ends Wednesday.

Wind-up of the program, held daily in nine Victoria parks, will take the form of a field sports day at Central Park which is expected to draw more than 1,000 youngsters.

There will be foot races and novelty events for boys and girls from five to 18. A specially-constructed ring will see boys trading punches in their own weight class in the annual parks boxing competition. Boys and girls will take part in a tether-ball tournament.

A special feature added this year will be an extensive display of children's handicrafts with a dozen youngsters giving on-the-spot demonstrations of the skills learned during the summer.

The field day starts at 1 p.m. and the last contest will be decided around 3.30 p.m., it is expected. Parents and friends are invited.

Playgrounds at Central and Beacon Hill parks will be open as usual Wednesday morning.

City playgrounds director Gordon Hartley said yesterday attendance is expected to at least equal last year's figure of more than 40,000.

As in past years, attendance boomed for the first two or three weeks of the summer program, then tailed off, dropping to its lowest ebb during the hot weather of the past few days.

Throughout the program large numbers of high school students turned up daily at the parks. Mr. Hartley warned this development—blamed on summer job shortage—will be repeated.

Playground supervisors reported older teenagers "by and large were most co-operative and helpful . . . but not overly energetic."

This poses a serious problem for next year and in the future, said Mr. Hartley. "They caused us no trouble," he said, "the problem is one that should be worked on."

The solution probably lies in future provision of instructors and equipment for tumbling, acrobatics, boxing, and more specialized handicrafts.

Popular Contest

Hole-in-One On This Week

The Gyro Club will hold its 21st annual hole-in-one contest this week from Wednesday to Saturday in Royal Athletic Park. Proceeds will be used for development of Cadboro Bay Park where the club has already spent $45,000.

The contest has proven popular and competition is keen for a $50 prize for scoring on a 75-yard driving range. Prizes of smaller amounts are also given. Laurie Kerr and Ronald Willey will give golfing demonstrations.

The carnival will consist of a "modified" midway with rides for children, games of skill and refreshment booths staffed by Gyro members and Gyronettes.

Grounds will open at 7.30 p.m. daily except Saturday, when events will start at 1.30 p.m.

DAILY COLONIST MAGAZINE

SUNDAY, JULY 31, 1960

Unwittingly, Logan Mathison, of 5070 Lockhaven Drive, may have stumbled upon the remains of a cabin in which occurred a crime that shocked old-time Victorians. For the fascinating story of the mystery at Ten Mile Point, see CECIL CLARK'S strange tale on Pages 8 and 9.

CAMEO TREASURE HOUSE

ATTICS are usually associated with an odd assortment of discarded household effects—father's old golf clubs, heavy-framed portraits, trunks containing family secrets, and the now grown-up children's playthings. But there is one in Victoria, actually the entire upstairs of a modern and well-kept home, which houses, among other art objects gathered from different parts of the world, a priceless collection of cameos in glass.

The decorative objects which, in some remarkable manner, had become wholly encased in solid blocks of clear glass had an immense appeal to the more easily mystified or diverted public of the nineteenth century. Among these small treasures for desk and dessing-table, one of the most notable was the crystal cameo, made in some quantity between 1819 and 1825, when it was known as medallion inlay.

By George Nicholson

Charles P. Smith Owns Rare Collection

There is real beauty in the restrained simplicity of the little bas-relief portrait in china clay. Under the refractive power of the flint-glass block in which it is enveloped, it assumes the glowing loveliness of silver.

Usually, the cameo bas-relief was copied from the work of a well-known medal sculptor, its subject being a portrait of a prominent individual or historical figure. The majority of these cameos were embedded in paper-weights, but others are found decorating the sides and stoppers of decanters; on goblets, plaques, scent bottles, the lids of trinket boxes, on lustres for candelabra and on tumblers and vases. So skilfully were they embedded that the uninitiated may well wonder how this was accomplished.

CERAMIC CAMEOS were a Bohemian invention of the mid-18th century, but results were poor because continental glass had not achieved the flawless brilliance of flint-glass. Also, distortion or cracking was always liable to occur during the cooling process, as glass and clay possessed unequal powers of expansion and contraction.

It was an Englishman, Apsley Pellatt, who brought distinction to the crystal cameo. Pellatt was born in the year 1791, and died in 1863. He succeeded his father, also named Apsley, at the glassworks of Pellatt and Green, at No. 16, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Holland Street, Southwark; later moving to Knowle Green, Staines, Middlesex. He represented the Borough of Southwark in Parliament from 1852 to 1857.

Pellatt introduced a bill which is on the British statutes to this day—making it legal that crossed cheques (two parallel lines drawn across the face of the cheque), although drawn to bearer, should be payable only through a bank. A rubber stamp, "For deposit only to the credit of . . .," but stamped on the back of the cheque, is the safeguard used by Canadian business firms. It means the same thing.

Under Pellatt's influence, the exceptional refractive power of glass gave to the simple bas-relief portrait which it enveloped a mellow brillance. In 1819, he patented his process of glass encrustation under the name "Crystallic Ceramic." Already he had produced some magnificent specimens at his father's glasshouse.

In his book "The Origin, Progress and Improvement of Glass Manufacture" (1821), he refers to colored cameos such as coats-of-arms, crests, flowers and landscapes. These were modelled in refractive material and painted in enamel colors which were hardened in the oven before being encased in the flint-glass. Other, uncolored, cameos were super-imposed upon colored opaque bases, but such pieces are extremely rare.

MOST COMMONLY, the cameo bas-relief consisted of a profile portrait and Pellatt-issued flint-glassware decorated with cameos of contemporary celebrities. These included George III, Queen Charlotte, George IV, Frederick Duke of York, Alexander I of Russia, Louis XVIII, and others.

The bust of Shakespeare, and that of Charles X of France, both in lamp lustres, are the work of Pellatt; so is a moulded glass "tea-caddy" sugar basin, with the bust of Prince Leopold, who married Princess Charlotte and was afterwards Leopold I, King of the Belgians. Most of these cameos were direct copies of medals, insignia or coins, although many others were made to the commission of sitters now unknown.

Pellatt says in his book, "Curiosities of Glass-making, with Details of the Processes and Production of Ancient and Modern Glass Manufacture," published in 1849: "The figures intended for encrustation must be made of materials that will require a higher degree of heat for their infusion than the glass within which it is to be encrusted. These are china clay and super-silicate of potash, ground and mixed in such proportion as experiments harmonize with the density of the glass, and this, when moulded (in plaster of Paris moulds) into a bas-relief or bust, should be slightly baked and then suffered to cool; or the cameos may be kept in readiness till required for encrustation, for which purpose they should be carefully reheated to redness in a small Stourbridge clay muffle.

"A cylindrical flint-glass pocket is then prepared, one end adhering to the hollow iron rod, with an opening at the other extremity, into which, and by the use of a pair of fine tongs, the hot composition figure (the cameo) is introduced. The end is then collapsed and welded together, by pressure at red heat, so that the figure is in the centre of the hollow glass pocket—or muffle.

"THE WORKMAN next applies his mouth at the end of the tube, while rewarming the glass at the other extremity; but instead of blowing, he exhales the air, thus perfecting the collapse by atmospheric pressure and causing the glass and composition figure to be one homogeneous mass."

In order to ensure superbly clear and brilliant quality in his flint-glass, Pellatt used white sand imported from Sydney, Australia, carried as ballast in the wool-laden ships. This sand was free of oxide of iron and other impurities which might normally tint flint-glass of that period.

The idea was taken up by some French glass-makers, who succeeded in encrusting perfectly a few medallions of Napoleon Bonaparte. Owing to the great number which were broken during the operation, very few were successfully finished and in consequence sold at a very high price. Later, however, their method was improved and world collections contain many excellent French pieces. Among the many French pieces in the Victoria collection is a 5x7-inch wall plaque, "Adoration of the Shepherds," after Rubens, and a tall altar-piece, "Virgin and Child," with a cross on top.

From 1875, John Ford and Company, Edinburgh, produced some exquisite crystal cameo paper-weights, decanter stoppers, door handles, flower vases and other ornaments, their high quality closely resembling that of the Apsley Pellatt glass of 1820. Cameo portraits in glass were also made by William Kidd, Poland Street, London, and by Lloyd and Somerfield, and F. and C. Osler, both of Birmingham. These were mostly paper-weights with portraits of Queen Victoria, Prince Consort, Sir Robert Peel, Gladstone, the Duke of Wellington and other notable personages of that period. But they also made others, including some rare pieces.

Queen Mary owned a collection which contained 35 pieces. In the Victoria collection there are 120, mostly by Pellatt, Ford and different French makers. Novel pieces include a glass decanter and a perfume bottle, both with the profile of Robert Burns, a glass seal, "Christ Carrying the Cross," a large table lamp with a portrait set in the stem, and finger bowl with the crest of the Northumberland Eusiliers. Owner of the Victoria collection is Charles P. Smith, 141 Howe Street, and it is there for anyone to view by appointment.

For RCAF Police

Security First

MAINTAIN law and order, protect public property, prevent and detect crime within the RCAF—these are the responsibilities of the Air Force Police.

Of all these, his primary concern is the security and protection of RCAF personnel and material. The word "security" covers a multitude of responsibilities in itself. At stations with an important air defence mission it means the protection of the vital elements of the combined Canadian and American North American Air Defence Command. Thus the Air Force Policeman is trained in the procedures of ground defence, tactics and weapons, security measures, and procedures for handling and safeguarding classified information and material.

On any RCAF station, regardless of its primary job, security means the well being and peace of mind of the people who live and work on that base. The Air Force Policeman is the man who helps their school-age children across the busy intersections. His continuous patrols of the permanent married quarters, the lengthy line and other vital areas throughout the long night keeps the installation safe and secure.

He is first on the scene in the event of a fire or accident.

Not all his tour of duty will be spent outdoors on patrols. An equally important aspect of his work is the administration of the guardhouse.

In addition, he must have a sound knowledge of Air Force law for he is often called upon to escort prisoners, give evidence at a summary trial or act as a witness.

Some personnel in the trade, usually senior NCOs, receive training in fingerprinting and identification techniques comparable to that received by civilian police agencies.

Petite and Vivacious Dawn Draper

CALLED for the QUEEN

By IAN SCOTT

ANYONE CAN SEE within a moment of meeting that this young woman combines a personality of warm friendliness, charm and enthusiasm with an astonishing vivacity.

It's not hard to appreciate why this petite brunette was selected as one of the three "big name" persons to act as masters of ceremony at the huge, annual square dance jamboree which has become a picturesque part of Penticton's Peach Festival.

After all, she possess, in addition to her widely known qualities as a "caller" and teacher in the square dance business, something unique. She was selected to introduce, explain and call the figures for a group invited to Victoria's Government House to entertain Her Majesty the Queen and Prince Philip during their July visit a year ago.

She admits she was nervous. But it was one of those occasions, as she explains, when a person just can't afford to make a mistake.

The affair was never publicized—and that was the way everybody wanted it. But among the eminent people in the square dancing movement Dawn's distinction is well known and the honor applauded.

WHEN it was announced that thousands would dance every day during the four-day Penticton festival that was no exaggeration. People come there from all over the Pacific Northwest and from the East, as well.

"They have the largest out-of-doors dance floor in Canada at King's Park," Dawn said. "It is 18,000 square feet and it will be crowded. It will be a big thrill to call for such a group."

Dawn, by the way, is the only woman member of the Caller-Teachers' Association on Vancouver Island. But she's president. She has had her own radio program, taught and called for three clubs here, and has been associated with the highly important business of square dancing for more than 10 years.

She and her husband, Les W. Draper, who live at 4050 Shelbourne Street with their 12-year-old son, David, have worked with the Promenaders, the Square Crows and the Double D's.

The names of these groups, and others like them, may sound a little odd to the uninitiated. But Dawn explains:

"There's nothing formal or stilted about these groups. People join them for fun—fun, friendship and fellowship. The people who teach are in the best position to know how this pastime has grown and to predict how it will increase in popularity in the future."

Something in the neighborhood of 450 to 500 couples were graduated from classes under instruction in this area alone last year.

In the United States there are 10,000,000 square dance fans.

The fever has spread into Asia and Europe. Young people dance "figures in squares and routines in rounds" in Tokyo and Hong Kong.

This is "smooth" dancing, not to be compared with the heavy-footed "barn dancing," although it may well have had its origin there.

"Square dancing is modern, sophisticated. It isn't danced to just the crying of a fiddle and the beat of an accordion. It is accompanied by all and every kind of music, not hoe-down stuff.

"Square dancing is for everyone," Dawn Draper declares.

WHEN THIS REPORTER was talking with Dawn shortly before she left for Penticton, she was excited. Who wouldn't be? From all the scores of callers across the country she had been selected to "emcee" the popular Penticton parade of dancers. With her were Bill Ireland of Calgary, and Les McConville of Seattle, two of the biggest people in their trade on this continent.

Anyone who thinks there isn't a large future in this business of square dancing, and a whole lot of pleasure in store for a great many people might be interested in knowing that the Western Square Dancers Association news bulletin—a very special kind of publication—goes out regularly to 2,400 couples on southern Vancouver Island.

That figure doesn't include such newly-formed groups as those at the Albernis and Campbell River, and who knows how many in process of formation.

It's entirely safe to say 10,000 people are enjoying square dancing on the Island this season and at the rate their ranks are expanding people who don't enjoy this sort of frolic soon will be the exceptions to the rule.

B.C. WAS SHORT OF CASH, SO DOUGLAS MADE MONEY

By TED SHACKLEFORD

WHERE ARE THEY? should be a big question among coin collectors who specialize in Canadiana, but not many collectors, even, know about 'em.

"They" are British Columbia's official bills. Yes, that's right, the British Columbia government issued its own paper money one day 'way back in 1862.

For anyone who doubts this, the provincial archives have the full story, but for the faithful, here it is . . .

It appears that late in 1861 Governor James Douglas found the Crown colony of British Columbia was plagued by a dire shortage of money of all types.

At the time Governor Douglas was facing a heavy payroll for men working on roads and other construction in the Fraser goldfield areas, so he issued an order-in-council, authorizing $75,000 worth of British Columbia government bills.

Calling for the new paper currency to be printed in dollar denominations was a bold step typical of Douglas. At that time just about any coin minted in the world passed for legal tender in the province, but it was still a Crown colony.

Official records of that time, of course, were kept in the pounds, shillings and pence system used in England.

Influencing Douglas' decision was the fact that United States and Spanish dollars were widely circulated in the country, many of the goldminers who flooded the area were U.S. citizens, and besides that, the Province of Canada—Upper and Lower Canada—had also decided on accepting the dollar as the monetary basis.

In his instructions to Captain William Gossett, treasurer of the Colony of British Columbia, Governor Douglas said:

"The denomination of the notes must be in dollars as that is the notation of the account of the community at large."

Of course, like a good Englishman, Gossett objected. It is generally agreed among historians that most everyone disagreed with Douglas more because of his nature than the nature of his decisions.

The notes were printed in Edinburgh, Scotland, on a peculiar paper watermarked 1860. Each was impressed with a seal signed by the treasurer (Gossett), and the cashier, and counter-signed by the Colonial Secretary, Sir Edward Bulwer-Lytton.

Some 24,000 $25 bills were issued, 1,000 $10 bills and 1,000 $5 bills, making up the total of $75,000. The Province of British Columbia is a legal entity and the notes were backed by the government of the day so it seems that same notes would be honored by Premier Bennett, as provincial finance minister, if they were presented.

There are two things against this happening, however. No copies of the notes are known to exist today, and if they did, they would be worth much more than their face value to collectors—they are among the scarcest notes ever used in North America.

Where are they all? It is inconceivable that the government should have been able to recall all of them for possible destruction, but none are to be found anywhere.

CAPTAIN GOSSETT is also connected with a fine copy of the rare $10 gold piece British Columbia issued in 1862, which the British Museum recently presented to New Westminster in honor of that city's centenary which falls this year.

The B.C. Mint and Assay Office was established in New Westminster about 100 years ago. Its most famous products are the $10 and $20 gold pieces which were never actually issued for use as money.

Only one mass striking of these coins was ever held—if it can be called a "mass" striking. Some 18 of the $10 pieces and 10 of the $20 pieces were struck at the one time for special display in the International Exhibition held in London, England, in 1862.

Captain Gossett was so enthusiastic about the design and quality of the gold coins he helped arrange for these coins to be displayed.

After the display, where the coins gained much favorable comment, a copy of each denomination was presented to the British Museum for its coin collection and the rest were melted down and sold as bullion.

And so, when the British Museum directors heard about New Westminster's centenary celebrations they had an electrotype copy made to present to the Canadian city.

Apart from the one "mass" striking, only isolated copies of the coins were minted as souvenirs or proofs before Bulwer-Lytton managed to have the colonial government of British Columbia abandon plans to go into full-scale production.

Great Britain has always been jealous of letting its colonies mint gold coins. Even today, coining in gold is the prerogative of the reigning monarch.

THE SWASTIKA, made infamous by Nazi Germany was not always a bad omen or a reviled sign.

It was originally a good luck symbol. When Adolph Hitler adopted it for his new political movement he reversed the direction of the outside legs and incidentally reversed its connotation.

This use as a good luck sign may explain the use of the original, anticlockwise swastika on a rare Victoria token found recently—it was issued by the Mona Cafe, a true pioneer restaurant, formerly located at 1307 Broad Street.

The Mona was known from Los Angeles to Alaska as the cafe providing the best tea and coffee on the Pacific Coast, a claim to fame which the owners did little to lessen.

The cafe was first opened in 1870 and continued until after the First World War.

The tokens were struck at Childs, a famous Chicago company of die makers which existed for more than 100 years.

The company's records are no longer in existance so attempts to get more information through that source have failed.

Maybe there is a long-time resident of the city who can remember the cafe, its owners and for what purpose the tokens were issued.

MAYBE YOU THINK IT'S A SIMPLE QUESTION:

This article is one of a series specially written by leading scientists in Britain to mark the 300th anniversary of the Royal Society in July, 1960. The Royal Society —or to use its full title, The Royal Society of London for the Promotion of Natural Knowledge — received its first charter from King Charles II, who also described himself as its founder and patron.

By DR. LOUIS ESSEN

A SENIOR SCIENTIST AT BRITAIN'S NATIONAL PHYSICAL LABORATORY. HE BUILT THE FIRST ATOMIC CLOCK USING CAESIUM ATOMS AT THIS LABORATORY.

DOMESTIC clocks can be set right to within one second by means of the six "pips" broadcast by the British Broadcasting Corporation, and more accurate clocks used for scientific purposes can be set to about one-hundredth of a second by means of special time signals from the Royal Greenwich Observatory.

The very ease with which clocks can be set in this way may conceal the complex process involved in establishing the accurate time scale on which the signals are based.

Any process which is repeated in a regular manner can be used to indicate the passage of time, but the regular movements of the bodies of the solar system are so inescapably obvious that they have been adopted for this purpose from the earliest times until the present day. In particular, the rotation of the Earth on its axis gives the solar day, which is divided by means of clocks into hours, minutes and seconds.

Although the solar day which governs our daily routine is such an obvious choice as the astronomical unit of time, it possesses two marked disadvantages: it is not of equal value throughout the year, and it cannot be measured very precisely.

Anyone who has seen a star moving across the field of a telescope will realize how much more precisely the passing of a star can be timed as it crosses a point vertically overhead; and in practice stellar observations are used to determine the sidereal day which is the time of rotation of the Earth relative to the fixed stars. This is then converted, from a knowledge of the length of the year, into the mean solar day.

A number of other corrections for known irregularities of the Earth's rotation are also made, and the clocks which supply the time signals are adjusted to keep in time with a hypothetical day based on current and past astronomical measurements and corrected to give a unit as nearly as possible uniform throughout the year.

It is important to notice that astronomical time serves two quite different purposes—it gives the time of day, which is required for civil and some scientific purposes, and also furnishes a scale of time on which the duration of events can be measured. It thus supplies the answers to the questions "What time is it?" and "How long does it take?" Most scientific work is concerned with the second question, and modern developments, particularly in the field of radio, often require a very exact measurement of extremely short events.

QUARTZ CLOCKS

WHEN WE ARE concerned with short events such as the time of one oscillation of a radio wave, it is more convenient to speak of the number of times the event is repeated in a second, that is to say, its frequency. The frequency of the transmitter at Droitwich, England, for example, is 200,000 cycles per second, and the frequency of television transmitters is in the region of 100,000,000 cycles per second.

Transmitting stations each operate in a narrow band of frequencies and, if they are not to interfere, they must keep strictly within this band. The accurate measurement and control of frequencies is essential if full use is to be made of the radio frequency spectrum available. Frequencies cannot be measured in terms of pendulum clocks, and a new form of clock, the quartz clock, was developed. A common form of this consists of a ring of about five centimetres diameter cut from a natural quartz crystal, and maintained in vibration by a radio valve at a frequency of 100,000 cycles per second.

The frequency depends mainly on the dimensions of the quartz ring, but can be pulled a little by the electrical circuit so as to have exactly its nominal value. Radio valves can be used as a reduction gear to give an electrical impulse for every 100,000 vibrations, and these "seconds" impulses can operate an ordinary clock dial. The quartz clock thus gives a time scale which is subdivided into very small fractions of a second and yet can extend for a number of years. This time scale provided by quartz clocks and astronomical observations of the stars enables intervals of time to be measured with an accuracy of one part in 100,000,000.

THE FINE subdivisions of the quartz clock time scale can be displayed on the screen of a cathode ray oscilloscope, and the duration of a single event can be measured by generating sharp electrical impulses at the beginning and end of the event and applying them to the scale on the oscilloscope. If, however, the event is repetitive, the frequency of repetition can be measured more simply and accurately by making fuller use of the properties of electronic circuits, which can be made to carry out the arithmetical processes of addition, subtraction, multiplication and division of frequencies.

To take a very simple example, suppose the frequency to be measured is 99,999 c/s. This frequency is subtracted from the 100,000 c/s of the standard, leaving a frequency of one c/s, which appears as a variation of the electrical current taken by the valve. This slow variation can be timed by very simple means with an accuracy of one per cent. The overall accuracy of the comparison is thus one-hundredth of a cycle in 100,000 cycles, that is one part in 10,000,000.

Elaborations of this simple technique enable any frequency to be measured in terms of a standard quartz clock with an accuracy of one part in 10,000,000,000. Such a fantastic accuracy is actually required in scientific work and also in technical applications. The accuracies required in these applications have thus advanced well beyond the accuracy with which the astronomical unit of time can be determined. This is not because astronomers have not made full use of technical improvements, but because of fundamental limitations placed by the solar system itself and of gaps in our knowledge of some of the complexities of its movements.

ATOMIC CLOCK

ALTHOUGH QUARTZ clocks can be used with the required accuracy, it is no longer adequate to calibrate them by means of the rotation of the Earth. This difficulty has been overcome by using as a standard of time another event which is regularly repeated in nature. This is the radio wave generated by an atom when its electron arrangement is changed slightly from one stable condition to another. The frequency of the wave is defined by one of the most fundamentally important relationships in physics and is simply proportional to the difference in the energy of the atom in the two states.

It should be emphasized that we are concerned here only with small changes in the atom and not with the disruption of the central core with resulting radioactive radiation. The changes of energy are minute compared with the "atomic energy" liberated when the atom is disrupted. Within this range of minute energy changes the larger differences give rise to radiation at a high frequency which appears as visible light.

The sodium lamps used for street lighting represent a practical application of visible atomic radiation. There is no technique for comparing the frequency of this radiation with a quartz clock, and it cannot therefore be used as a standard of frequency or time. A smaller difference in energy gives rise to radiation at a lower frequency which falls in the range of radio waves, and this frequency can be measured by a quartz clock by means of the techniques described above. The actual frequency measurement is not difficult, but there are many practical difficulties arising from the weakness of the radiations and from the need to observe them without introducing disturbing effects which cause a slight shift of the natural atomic frequency. To overcome these difficulties, one of the most advanced experimental techniques is used; and of the many atoms or molecules which could be used theoretically the caesium atom has proved to be the most suitable.

CONSIDER the structure of this atom. It consists of a heavy central nucleus surrounded by 55 electrons, 54 of which are arranged in stable groups with a single electron surrounding them. This outer electron and the nucleus itself are spinning, and the spins can be in either the same or in opposite directions. The transition from one condition to another is accompanied by the emission of a radio wave having, according to recent measurements, a frequency of 9,192,631,770 cycles per second. This happens to be in the range of frequencies used for radar during the Second World War, and corresponds to a wave-length of about three centimetres. It is a very convenient value from the point of view of electronic circuits.

In order to understand how the atomic clock works, it is necessary to consider also the magnetic effects of the spinning electron. A spinning electric charge produces a magnetic field, and the atom therefore behaves as a small magnet the polarity of which is reversed when the spin is reversed. If, therefore, the atoms are passed through a non-uniform magnetic field they will be deflected in opposite directions according to which of the two states they are in.

Atoms in the two states can be separated by apparatus, all the parts being enclosed in a very high vacuum. Atoms leaving the oven travel in straight lines until they are deflected by the magnets. Atoms in opposite states are deflected and are selected by the central slit. Those selected are deflected farther in the same direction, away from the detector.

IMPORTANT FEATURE

IN THE PART of the path between the two magnets an alternating field is now applied, and when this has the correct strength and frequency the atoms in the low energy state absorb energy from the field and jump to the high energy state. At the same time those in the high energy state are induced to emit radiation at their natural frequency and jump to the low energy state. Many of the atoms thus change their state and therefore the direction of their magnetization. They are then deflected in the opposite direction by the second magnet and reach the detector, where they are converted into an electrical current which can be measured by well-known techniques.

The important feature of the atomic standard is the extraordinary sharpness of this effect: it is only when the frequency of the radio oscillator corresponds almost exactly to that of the atoms that transitions from one state to the other occur. In practice, the frequency is varied slowly and set to give a maximum atomic beam current, and this setting can be made with an accuracy of one part in 10,000,000,000. The sharpness depends only on the length of time which the atoms spend in the

WHAT TIME IS IT?

Let's Let the Experts Explain

field producing the transitions. In the present equipment, which is five feet (1.524 m) long, this is rather less than a thousandth of a second. A new clock which is being built at the National Physical Laboratory is 17 feet (5.182 m) long, and will give a still greater precision.

When the radio oscillator has been set to the atomic frequency it is used to calibrate the quartz clocks, or in sophisticated versions of the equipment it can be made to adjust the clocks automatically so that they keep in step with the atomic radiation.

THUS, instead of making the clocks keep in step with the Earth, which turns on its axis once in 86,400 seconds and revolves once round the sun in roughly 30,000,000 seconds, we now make them keep in step with the atom which makes roughly 10,000,000,000 vibrations in one second. This change enables the unit of time to be defined much more accurately and conveniently and also much more quickly, in a few minutes instead of a few years.

The problem of time measurement has thus been greatly simplified. When it took at least a year to set the quartz clocks in terms of astronomical time, it was necessary to keep these clocks operating under very stable, uniform conditions for periods of years. Elaborate precautions had to be taken to ensure this continuity of operation, safeguards being incorporated for such emergencies as the failure of the electrical supplies. It had to be assumed, moreover, that the clock continued to gain or lose by the amount indicated by earlier measurements; and as it is known that even the best quartz clocks are subject to erratic changes, it was customary to employ a number of clocks at each installation. The atomic clock enables the quartz clock to be calibrated or directly controlled in a few minutes, and there is no longer any need for continuity except over the time interval being measured. For most purposes this is relatively short, and it is only long in astronomical work such as the measurement of the time of rotation of the earth in terms of atomic time.

The standard of time differs from those of length and mass in one important respect: it can, as explained at the beginning of this article, be made available over wide areas by means of radio time signals. In exactly the same way standard frequencies can be made available by controlling the frequency of the transmitter. Thus Droitwich, which has the convenient round number value of 200 kc/s, is often used for this purpose, and in addition, for more accurate work, a special service of transmissions with the call sign MSF is sent from the Rugby, England, station of the post office on behalf of Britain's National Physical Laboratory. These operate on frequencies of 60 kcs, 2.5 mcs, 5 mcs and 10 mcs, and since 1955 they have been measured in terms of the caesium atomic standard.

IN THIS WAY the great accuracy of this standard has been used for precise time measurements in many different countries. One use of the transmissions has been to compare the frequencies of the atomic standards in the United Kingdom with those in the United States, Canada and Switzerland. The very close agreement between them, in spite of the fact that they have been made quite independently and have many differences in detail, gives strong justification for the use of the caesium resonance as a standard.

The thoughtful person will still ask how we know that the atomic frequency is constant. How do we know that it is the speed of the rotation of the earth, and not the atomic frequency, which has changed slightly during the last few years? The answer is that there is at present no theoretical reason by which a change in the atomic frequency could be explained, and all experiments that have been made have failed to show any change.

On the other hand, there are a number of possible explanations for a small change in the period of rotation of the earth. As with all standards of measurement, there is no means of knowing positively that it is constant. It is simply the most constant thing we know of, and if anything better is found then that will become the new standard.

DOGS are FUN for the FAMILY

HAVE YOU got a dog that performs amusing tricks? Or a dog that has any little eccentricity? They all have personality. They're all amusing. But for stories about your dog—purebred, mongrel, pup or pappy—The Islander will pay its usual rates on publication.

HERE'S an example of the kind of story The Islander would like to have:

Sabre is a sweet-faced fellow, not a year old yet, whose antecedents undoubtedly have included a collie, a Labrado retriever, possibly a spaniel and perhaps some terrier. He's very affectionate and, big and heavy footed, loves to awaken master and mistres.. by leaping on their beds.

He's a show-off, too. And if he gets a laugh he is encouraged in all sorts of nonsense.

Sabre looked up, smiling, tail wagging.

From that moment he developed one of the most extraordinary acts that ever a dog performed, unrehearsed, entirely impromptu. He dived and bit at the saucer. He pounced from a distance. He barked, growled, whined. Finally, he righted it. But he was well aware that that meant the end of the game and the laughter. He upset it and started his performance all over again.

Finally he broke the saucer.

He recognized the finality of that development.

Then he nonchalantly sat and scratched himself.

The show was over.

PEOPLE KEEP dogs for fun. They get them as companions for their children, as guards for their homes, as aids on farms or maybe for hunting. Whatever the reason, they go on keeping them, year after year, essentially because dogs are fun.

Whether it be a monster St. Bernard or a tiny chihuahua, dogs have an abiding appeal because they bring them chuckles. Whether a dog can fetch, guard, or just lies in the sun, he wins his free home because he gives his owner some fun. Another reason is because dogs differ so widely in personality that on never knows what to expect.

THIS BASSETT isn't as sad as he looks. He's a show dog, but he'll cuddle or romp, guard the children, fetch and carry. He is one of the most appealing of all breeds.

Purebred or Mongrel

"We got our first St. Bernard for our boys," says C. E. Cawker, who now has eight of them woofing around his place at Foxboro, Ontario. "Then we started to breed them because they're delightful bluffs. They may look fierce but really are very gentle."

Mr. Cawker's biggest dog, 230 pound Kobi, is a St. Bernard who looks as if he should be rescuing travellers in the Alps of Switzerland where he was born. But Kobi now goes to dog shows and rides in the back of the family car, whirling down the highway with wind whistling past his big floppy ears.

And it's because little dogs are so funny in their efforts to act like big dogs that Mr. and Mrs. Arthur M. W. Samuels, of Mimico, Ontario, love tiny chihuahuas.

One of their chihuahuas holds a companion dog certificate for obedience, although he's so tiny he can climb into a person's coat pocket. Now his owners are teaching him how to fetch.

To a recent Toronto dog show, Mr. and Mrs. Samuels brought a 2½ pound chihuahua named Camista Blanca, and entered her in the obedience trials. At the show she struck up a friendship with the 230-pound Kobi, proving that a big St. Bernard and a tiny chihuahua often have a lot in common . . . their high degree of intelligence, affection, and their ability to give their owners a great deal of fun.

Owners usually go to dog shows for ribbons but among the general public there are many who pay admission just because they like watching dogs. They'll spend hours going from kennel to kennel, seeing all types and sizes, and chuckling, for example, over a wrinkled English bulldog who may look as fearsome as his nature is sweet. Or maybe their fancy will be caught by the basset hounds, looking so sad when they're not sad at all, and it's a lot of fun to try and find the basset with the droopiest face.

But the vast majority of dogs are never entered in a dog show and thousands of them are just plain mongrels. It makes no difference. The average Canadian loves his dog, not because of its breeding, not because it can fetch, guard, or perform any special function, but just because it's a dog.

HOW ABOUT those doggy anecdotes? It doesn't matter that they happened yesterday or ten years ago. And if you have a picture of your pet, The Islander would like to see it.

EYE APPEAL IS NECESSARY, SAYS MURIEL WILSON

Anyone for Dessert?

THERE MAY BE a few sophisticates who scorn desserts but I have a feeling that the voice of this minority group will never be heard above the din of the great majority demanding, "What's for dessert?"

For most people the dessert is the special part of the meal and for this reason it should be dramatic, it should have glamor. By this, I don't necessarily mean that it should be rich and fancy, but that it should be interesting. Unless it does create a little stir of interest there is little point in having a last course. A good dinner can end perfectly well after the main course, because hunger has already been appeased. A dessert should be that last little satisfaction . . . it should leave one with a happy, contented feeling.

Of course a dessert can be fancy . . . it can be a really gorgeous, show-off-spectacular; but this type of dessert is best reserved for dessert parties, that charming way of entertaining now much in vogue. I will talk about these special desserts later, but first let's think of some everyday desserts which can be served after a regular, everyday meal.

No matter how simple, don't ignore the dramatic ingredient . . . eye appeal. Remember, it should cause at least a small ripple of applause. What could be simpler for dessert than watermelon . . . what could be more dramatic than wedges of this gorgeous fruit arranged on a turquoise or white or green—plate? A fruit salad, with the jewel colors of summer fruit, displayed in a clear glass bowl accompanied by delicate sugar cookies. If skilfully arranged, assorted cheeses and crackers can be that satisfying, happy ending.

The dessert in our illustration today is light and fanciful, easy to make and just right to serve after a substantial main course. It is delicate, cool and not too sweet. It is a fresh lime parfait—in French, parfait means perfect. It can be prepared ahead of time, which is a boon this time of year. A packaged pudding mix is called for but grated lime rind and juice are a happy addition, giving it a refreshing tang. Light cream is added for extra richness. Alternate layers of pudding and crushed vanilla wafers are spooned into tall parfait galsses. Here is the complete recipe—¾ cup vanilla wafer crumbs, one teaspoon grated lime rind, three tablespoons fresh lime juice, 1¼ cups top milk or light cream plus ½ cup cold milk, one package instant vanilla pudding mix. Crush enough wafers to yield the required ¾ cup crumbs, put a spoonful into each of five or six parfait glasses. Prepare the lime rind and juice. Pour the milk and cream into a bowl, stir in the lime juice and rind. Add the pudding mix, beat one minute. Let stand until thickened. Spoon alternate layers of pudding and crumbs into the glasses. Chill. Top with a puff of whipped cream and a green cherry.

FROZEN PARFAIT is good, too, and not difficult to make. In a small saucepan mix ½ cup sugar and ¼ cup water. Cook to soft ball stage or 242° on your candy thermometer. Have two egg whites beaten stiff. Dribble the syrup into the egg whites and continue beating until all the syrup is incorporated and the mixture stands up in peaks. Let cool, then fold in one cup of cream, whipped stiff, and flavoring to taste. A tablespoon of sherry gives it a delicate flavor. Pour into refrigerator tray and freeze until firm (about four hours). No stirring is necessary. Fruit or nuts can be added before freezing but I like to make it plain and layer it in tall glasses with sweetened fresh fruit.

Simple sugar cookies are nice with these sorts of desserts and here is one of my favorites, not fancy but delicious. The recipe makes about 80 and they are nice to have on hand.

Angel Cookies Cream in a bowl ½ cup each brown sugar and white sugar and one cup Crisco.

Lime Parfait

Add one egg and beat well. Now sift together two cups all-purpose flour, two teaspoons baking powder and half a teaspoon of salt. Of course you will sift the flour before measuring. Add the dry ingredients to the creamed mixture. Add one teaspoon almond flavoring. Chill in the refrigerator about an hour. Remove, and using a small teaspoonful of dough at a time, roll into balls. If you flour your hands the dough won't stick. Roll the balls in granulated sugar then place on a greased cookie sheet, well apart, as they spread. Do not flatten. Sometimes I roll these in lime jello crystals or Demerara sugar for variation. Bake in a 375° oven till lightly brown.

DO YOU REMEMBER the beautiful trifle of your childhood? It is a dessert that seems a little out of date now. In our house it used to be a Sunday treat. I'm not sure if my mother soaked the cake with sherry or fruit juice but it was so good it remains one of my happy memories. It was fun to probe the sweet goodness for nuts and fruit and taste the deliciousness of satin-smooth custard under its thick topping of whipped cream. It always came to the table in a handsome cut-glass bowl and was served with a large silver spoon.

My mother's recipe for Sunday Trifle—Line a bowl, preferably a glass bowl, with slightly-dry sponge cake. Soak this thoroughly with sherry or fruit juice. On this foundation lay preserved peaches, then a layer of raspberry jam, then blanched almonds split in half. Cover the whole with a medium-thin custard. Homemade custard, no powdered mixes here. Cover the custard with a generous layer of stiffly-whipped cream and decorate with strips of angelica. I now use halves of glace cherries to decorate the top. Today we'd probably consider this dessert too rich to serve after a hearty roast beef Sunday dinner, but however and whenever you use it, you can be sure it will have approval. Men are exceedingly fond of it.

Readers are continually asking me for low calorie desserts. Fruit Juice Snow is in this category. The following amounts will serve eight with only 93 calories per serving. Mix one envelope of unflavored gelatine with one-half cup sugar and a quarter teaspoon of salt. Add 1¾ cups very hot water and stir until the gelatine is dissolved. Add one tin (six ounces) frozen, concentrated fruit juice of your choice—orange, grapefruit, lime, grape, tangerine. Stir until melted. Chill to slightly thicker than unbeaten egg white consistency. Add two unbeaten egg whites and beat with rotary beater or electric beater until mixture begins to hold its shape. Turn into a six to seven-cup mold or individual molds and chill until firm. Serve plain or with a thin custard sauce, using the egg yolks, or make a whipped topping of dry skim milk powder (equal parts dry skim milk powder and water, beaten until it holds a peak, then add flavoring). This is cloud-light and delicious. A fine dessert for children as well as adults.

AT THE BEGINNING of this column I spoke of eye appeal—that necessary feature of a successful dessert. To achieve a glamor look—of course the taste must live up to the look—garnishes are especially helpful and more than worthwhile. It is the little things that make food memorable. Children are not the only ones who respond to a bright cherry, chocolate bits, chopped nuts, a mint leaf or a fluff of whipped cream atop a dessert. Then there is the way you serve a dessert—a spoonful of pudding or an ordinary saucer is pretty nondescript. Put the same pudding in a pretty glass, tall or short, and it takes on a new character. A stemmed or parfait glass can be bought for less than the price of a loaf of bread; variety stores abound in pretty glasses of all shapes, sizes and colors. A new table accessory stimulates the interest of both the family and the cook.

And another thing—while we are on the subject of table setting and what we can do to enhance the look of food, let me ask you something. Do you save all your nice dishes, glass for company? Who is more important than your own family?

There is a charming custom, and one that is easy on the hostess, to ask guests for dessert only. For this you want a real spectacular. From my special occasional file comes Lemon Angel Refrigerator Cake—Buy or make one angel food cake, cut into three layers. The following filling is ample to go between the layers and over the top and sides. First, make up a lemon pie filling from your own recipe or from a Jello cream pie filling mix. If you use the mix use one-quarter cup lemon juice instead of water to mix with the egg yolks. Cool the filling and pour into a large bowl. Beat the egg whites left from the filling until stiff. Add two tablespoons sugar and beat again. Beat one cup whipping cream until stiff. Now, into the bowl with the lemon filling, add one tin drained crushed pineapple, the beaten egg whites, the whipped cream. This makes a lot, so be sure you start out with a big enough bowl. You can use the pineapple juice as part of the liquid in the lemon pie filling. Spread between angel food layers and on top and sides. Decorate with halves of glace cherries or pineapple pieces. This can be made the day before and stored in the refrigerator. In fact it will cut better if made ahead. It will serve 12 to 16, according to size of the pieces you cut.

If it's a fancy party, you may want to have several kinds of dessert. Parfait ice cream pies, tortes put together with drained fresh fruit, ice cream with assorted, serve-yourself toppings and tiny fancy cakes are all good. An outdoor dessert party on the patio is a wonderful way to entertain. Try it soon.

From Marcia Davenport

NEW WINE, OLD BOTTLE

By WILLIAM D. PATTERSON

AN ELOQUENT, splendidly-written novel of two contrasting worlds of love and marriage—Italian and American—has come from the practiced pen of Marcia Davenport in her latest book, "The Constant Image."

These worlds have in common wealth, leisure, fashion and self-indulgence, but there the similarities end. The serious and startling differences concern the author more than the similarities, and, of course, contribute to the extraordinary dramatic tension of this love story.

The attractive and sensuous protagonists are a divorced American woman, Harriet Piers, and a dashing Italian aristocrat, Carlo Dalverio. They may seem like stock characters in the familiar setting of the New World American woman bewitched and then abandoned by the Old World seducer in the exotic, passionate Italian landscape.

But Mrs. Davenport is a writer of stature, perception and philosophical insights. She is not only aware of social backgrounds and the shrewd details that define their unique ambience but of the psychological pressures that these backgrounds exert on the people who move among them.

MARCIA DAVENPORT

Thus she writes in the great tradition of Henry James and Edith Wharton, but with a lean, elegant style and with a sureness of mind that are all her own.

Mrs. Davenport knows Italy intimately, having lived there in a lovely villa for a good part of the past 12 years. The aristocratic society of Italy is as familiar to her as her own classical gardens on the shores of Lake Como.

One of the things she understands about Italy is that a man's love affairs are the familiar business of his wife and his family. They observe his amorous adventures with a fond pride and understanding, recognizing them as part of the growing up process for males as well as marriages. Italian women take the long view of marriage as long as their husbands do not spend too much time in one particular boudoir.

So the affair in Milan between the divorced Harriet and Carlo, the handsome but solidly wed, starts in the usual easy pattern and with the traditional indulgent blessings of the wife who feels a certain sympathy for the American lady. His family observes and comments on the affair with the regular interest it accords Carlo's conquests.

Then something very irregular and un-Italian happens. Carlo not only makes love to Harriet. He violates all the rules by falling in love with her and thus immediately threatens a basic and sanctified Italian institution, his marriage.

These are scenes of the finest social observation and dramatic writing. Subtly the engaged sympathies of the reader are shifted from the glamorous lovers to the families as embattled defenders of marriage and the sound traditions of society.

The characters, all vividly and minutely drawn, thus become involved in a fierce struggle that leads to a logical and painful conclusion, but not the one the reader by any means expects.

This is a superb novel not only about people entangled in love, but about people entangled in marriage and a way of life that finally conflict with "love" and the easy American image of love, life and marriage. It is social observation and writing at the very top level.

At Stratford Festival

Canadian Showcase

HUNDREDS of Canadian books on many subjects, in both English and French, and hundreds of other books relating to Shakespeare, the theatre, music, art and ballet are being exhibited at the Stratford Festival this summer.

They are on show from June 27 to Sept. 10 in the Festival exhibition hall on the Stratford lakeshore near the famous theatre. The public will have free access to the exhibit each weekday from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m., and Sundays from 2 to 6 p.m.

The 1,350-volume Festival book exhibit, prepared especially for the Festival by the Book Publishers' Association, has provided hours of enjoyment for some 60,000 visitors during the past five years. It is a favorite meeting place, and because so many are from other countries it is a showcase for the work of Canadian authors.

The publishers spare neither pains nor their finest editions to make it something to be remembered. Although the books range from 50 cents to $50 volumes, visitors are permitted to handle them. They are indeed invited to browse or to read undisturbed, a feature that has won many grateful tributes.

A selection of fine books for children completes the exhibition. Centring it this year will be the first North American showing outside Toronto of a quantity of books from the famous Osborne Collection of Early Children's Books 1560-1910. These are on loan through the kindness of the Toronto public library board from their permanent home in Boys' and Girls' House, Toronto, where they form part of a total collection of 3,500 volumes. They are fascinating old books that have been read and re-read by English children since the days of Elizabeth I.

In the same building will be a priceless collection of antiquarian books from the private library of Sidney T. Fisher of Montreal. In a viewing area reminiscent of Shakespeare's Globe Theatre, Festival visitors may see not only Mr. Fisher's precious four folios but some 200 other rare books from his library which show that Shakespeare's literary importance is at least as great as his dramatic importance and thus counterbalance, in a fascinating manner, the Festival's magnificent dramatic program.

This distinguished loan exhibit is from one of the world's finest private collections of Shakespeare books. Neither the general public nor the scholar can afford to miss it.

JEROME WEIDMAN

sion, under the orders of an American colonel, that takes her to Claridge's and the bedroom of an old friend. Or was he a friend?

We begin to learn the truth when we are taken back to the Ninth Street flat of an Italian barber, on New York's Lower East Side, who has an 11-year-old daughter named Julie, whom he beats up when he is drunk. We learn more of it when we travel to Oregon six years later, where Julie's adored sister, Celia, is on the eve of marrying a young settlement worker who ran away from the East Side because he was charged with offences of which he was not guilty. They were not married. She died, and he went on to Washington and a bedroom in the White House. His name was Benjamin Franklin Ivey. The original of Ivey's character is anyone's guess. But anyone can, I think, guess rather easily.

That Jerome Weidman has an ear that enables him to write dialogue that never faults is known to all his readers. In this novel he has done what he has often done before, written scenes that come alive through the spoken word. The passage in which Mrs. Sarno tries to persuade Celia that she should marry Louis Vinutti is a minor masterpiece of maternal dialectic. The scene in which Celia tries to tell her adoring younger sister the truth about herself is heartbreaking. The scenes with the handsome, drunken Italian barber are unpleasantly convincing.

But the character who will probably fascinate most readers is Benjamin Franklin Ivey, the social-worker son of a hell-fire and brimstone Methodist minister. "He's like a magician," Mrs. Sarno said. "He makes people do things they don't know or want."

His eloquence was inexhaustible, his ability to quote Wordsworth was very nearly insufferable, but he knew that from the beginning of his life he was on his way to success, and he hewed to that way, despite his emotional collapses in the face of crises.

Ourselves To Know, by John O'Hara, the story of a man who murdered his young wife, and why he did so.

The Lincoln Lords, by Cameron Hawley, another novel of big business, by the author of "Executive Suite," in which he plumbs the deeper issues.

The Curtain Falls, by Maurice Druon, a novel of two French families in the years between the two world wars.

UNSOLVED MYSTERY OF

Did the Murdered Youth Know of Some Dark Sec

LEAVES were casually falling and a tang of woodsmoke in the afternoon air proclaimed stump-burning time, as stalwart, bearded, Royal Navy surgeon Gilbert Kirker strode, shotgun in hand, along the E & N Railway tracks, a hundred yards or so north of the Admirals Road crossing.

Free for the moment from his naval hospital duties, he had an eye open for grouse when he suddenly decided to branch off the railroad, downhill toward the water.

He hadn't gone more than 30 yards through a parklike stand of Garry oaks before he found something besides leaves in his path.

It was a man, flat on his back, fists clenched, his knees drawn up and an expression of acute agony on his face. Kneeling beside the supine figure, Kirker quickly discovered that pain or fear was no longer this man's problem. He was dead!

Hastening back to the naval hospital Dr. Kirkner reported his discovery and soon Provincial Constable Dan Campbell, sole guardian of the law in Esquimalt, was on the scene with an undertaker.

"Probably died of heart failure," was the naval medico's opinion, as Constable Campbell headed a page in his notebook with the date: October 30, 1898.

Among other things Campbell noted was the fact that the deceased was a small man, not more than 5 foot, 4 inches, and probably not over 130 pounds. His dark hair was slightly streaked with grey and making allowances for a bushy black moustache and beard, his age was somewhere between 50 and 60. Over a black cotton shirt, he wore thinly striped bib overalls and on his feet thick socks and heavy miner's boots.

Beside him lay a tobacco pipe, the remains of a bottle of whisky and a black felt hat. In his pockets was $34.50 in bills and silver, a large clasp knife, some matches in a hinged cover brass matchbox and a small, rather unusual-looking, flat key.

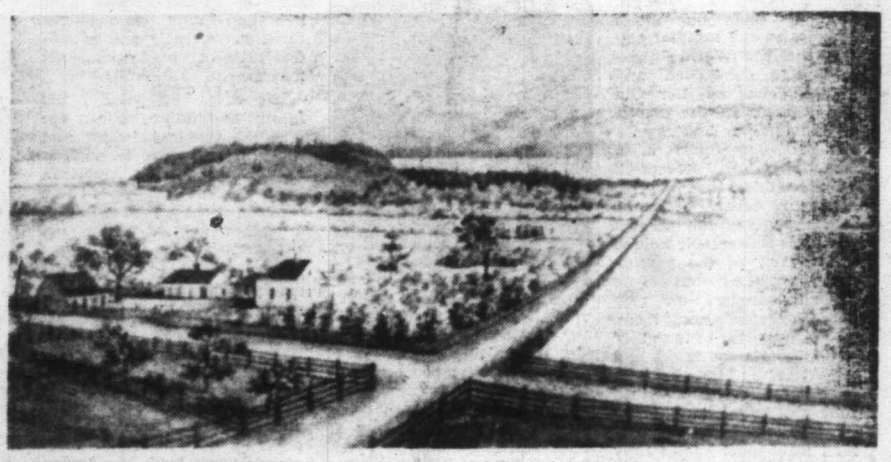

There were no letters or papers to identify him, and, as was proved later, no identifying marks on his clothing.

AT AN INQUEST two days later in Victoria Coroner Ernest Crompton and a jury heard medical testimony that confirmed the fact that the stranger had "died in great agony" of a heart ailment. As to who he was; not a clue!

No one in Victoria, it seemed, was the slightest bit interested as to whether he lived or died, whereupon the man who had succumbed in silent agony beside the E and N tracks, was buried at public expense.

Before he was interred, however, Provincial Police Sergeant John M. Langley had the forethought to have him photographed, and the picture was filed with a report of the occurrence.

Brief mention of the incident in local papers attracted no attention, possibly because there were more important things on page one. Things like the developing tension between Britain and France over North African Fashoda incident, and the peace negotiations between the U.S. and Spain.

LANSDOWNE AND RICHMOND, in an old painting of Deans' farm, where young Smith was probably last seen alive by any other than his slayer. This was sparsely settled country in those days.

The Fashoda affair was causing a review of Britain's armed might around the globe, which included Esquimalt's defences.

One member of the 5th, keen on the weekly drills, was Private Harry Edward Smith, a 26-year-old bachelor, carpenter by trade, Liberal in politics and vice-president of the Sons of England. Harry, son of well-to-do grocer George E. Smith, lived with his parents behind their grocery store on Government Street at the corner of John, just north of Bay Street. It was also in that fall of 1898 that son Harry decided to go out to the family cabin at Ten Mile Point for a few days grouse shooting.

IT WAS ON FRIDAY, October 20, that he left home carrying his shotgun, a couple of blankets and a small pack. Alighting from the streetcar at the end of the line, opposite the Jubilee Hospital, he walked up Richmond Road to the Deans farm near Lansdowne, where he spent the night with this pioneer Scottish family.

Next morning, Saturday, he hiked through the Hudson's Bay property east of Mount Tolmie, struck down toward Cadboro Bay, then following the trail from the north end of the beach to Telegraph Cove, cut through the Giant Powder Company's property along the foreshore to the Smith cabin. It was just a one-room shack, 12 feet by 12 feet, standing back on a grassy bench above the rocks facing Haro Strait.

Although he was best known in his day as a grocer, Harry's father, George Smith, had also at one time owned the King's Head Saloon on Johnson Street and it was from one of his bartenders, Bill Hammond, that he'd acquired, within the past year, the Ten Mile Point property.

Apparently young Smith felt somewhat burdened on his trip out, because he left his blankets at the Deans'. The next day, Sunday, he went back for them.

"I guess you didn't sleep too well, without them," suggested George Deans, and Harry, with a grimace, admitted the bunk was pretty hard. "You've got to get used to it after living in town," he said with a grin. Adjusting his blanket roll over his shoulder he headed back to Telegraph Cove.

A week went by, then another, until suddenly one day grocer Smith began to wonder how his son was getting along. On November 6, 18 days after Harry left home, his father went out to the Deans' farm and there learned that they also had seen nothing of Harry for a couple of weeks. One of the Deans boys accompanied Mr. Smith to Cadboro Bay, and finally they reached the cabin at the end of the foreshore trail east of Telegraph Cove.

There they found a padlock on the door and the place deserted. The two men tried peering through the cabin's only window but couldn't make out much, except what seemed to be a man's waistcoat hanging on a nail above one of the two bunks built end to end on the east side of the shack.

He knew that Hammond still occasionally used the cabin, and had brought his groceries from Sidney by canoe.

Deans went over to the edge of the rocky bluff and noticed a dugout canoe hauled up above highwater in a little cove sheltered by a couple of rocky islets.

"There's a canoe here," he yelled back to Smith.

Still mystified, but urged by a queer sense of foreboding, Smith put his shoulder to the cabin door to stumble in over the threshold, followed by Deans.

The gloomy interior smelt a little "foul and damp" as he later described it, but once inside the visitors took note of a small table near the window, two empty bunks, the roughly built open fireplace in one corner, some firewood and an axe.

As their eyes accustomed to the cabin's light Deans suddenly grabbed Smith by the arm and pointed to the end of the cabin, near the window. From under the bunk protruded a bare leg. There was just light enough for them to make out that the leg belonged to a body, the body of a man, nearly nude, who had been dead some time.

Shocked and shaken, Smith and Deans had seen enough and with ashen faces hastily withdrew, closing the door behind them.

Hotfooting it for the Powder Company offices, there they phoned the Provincial Police, and a few hours later Sergeant Langley arrived by horse and buggy with Constable W. R. Atkins.

or the Powder Company offices, d the Provincial Police, and a Sergeant Langley arrived by with Constable W. R. Atkins.

TED the cabin's size, that the water and the door "faced Sidney," and it was only with great difficulty that he managed to pull the body out to the centre of the floor; in fact had to partially dismantle the bunk to do it. Cause of death was quickly apparent: the dead man had received a terrific axe cut above the left ear, and the bloodstained axe lay beside the woodpile in the opposite corner.

George Smith was called into the cabin and stupified with horror, identified the murder victim as his son.

From the evidence around them the police had little difficulty in reconstructing the crime. Clad only in a black cotton shirt, Harry Smith must have been asleep in the bunk farthest from the window, covered with his blankets, when his assailant dealt him the axe blow that caused instant death. Judging by blood that dripped through the bunk boards to the floor and in a trail down the uneven floor toward the window, the murdered man had laid there some time before the murderer yanked off the blankets, rolled them in a bundle and stuffed them under the bunk; then lifting the dead man out, he stowed his victim under the neighboring bunk, probably to prevent the crime being spotted by anyone peering through the window.

One thing seemed certain to Langley: Whoever perpetrated the ghastly killing must have been possessed of unusual strength to handle the body in this fashion.

After wrapping up the blood-stained axe in newspaper, Langley removed the waistcoat from the wall above the bunk, and found in one pocket a watch, the hands stopped at five minutes before six. George Smith identified the garment and watch as his son's property.

THE PADLOCKED DOOR interested Langley, and carefully examining the window he saw cobwebs from the sash to the logs, proof that it hadn't been opened in some time. Only food found in the cabin was a piece of very mouldy cooked meat in one of the two grub boxes.

Propped against the wall near the table was Harry Smith's double-barelled shotgun and breaking it open Langley found it loaded. One of the shells bore blood stains, indicating it had been loaded after the murder. Had the murderer contemplated suicide? Did his nerve fail him at the last minute?

Too early a day for fingerprints to tell anything about the axe handle, the body was removed to town and the cabin sealed. That evening down at the Langley Street courthouse, B.C. Police Superintendent Fred S. Hussey and Sergeant Langley sat with the still shaken Government Street grocer, trying to piece together the background of his son's life and recent actions.

As the quiet questioning went on it was soon apparent that Harry Smith lived an exemplary life, without a single enemy. Previous owner of the cabin property, Bill Hammond, hadn't been seen for a few weeks, although he had been a great friend of Harry Smith. Probing this angle, the police learned this much about Hammond: After serving five years in the British navy, he had been discharged from HMS Sparrowhawk at Esquimalt in 1870, after which he went steamboating up and down the coast, sometimes as far south as San Francisco, and often north to Alaska.

In 1872 he met the Smiths — the year that Harry was born — and for a time lived with them. Later, when Smith was personally running the King's Head, "Billy" Hammond was one of his bartenders. As Smith had also served in the navy, the pair got along well, and with two ex-navy men running the pub, the King's Head was soon a sort of rallying spot for Esquimalt sailors, especially on Saturday nights.

HAMMOND was behind the bar a couple of years, and during that time saved enough money to buy 62 acres on the Ten Mile Point waterfront from William Deans. Soon after that he quit bartending to head for the Omenica gold rush along with a Mr. Johns, father of jail warden R. F. Johns. Unsuccessful in his search for gold, Billy Hammond came back to join a gold dredging outfit on the lower Fraser River, and after that completely dropped from sight.

Fifteen years went by, during which time the Smiths heard not a word from him. Now and again they enquired from new arrivals if they'd seen Hammond, and once George Smith even put an ad in a mainland paper. It was always the same story; Billy had vanished as if the earth had swallowed him.

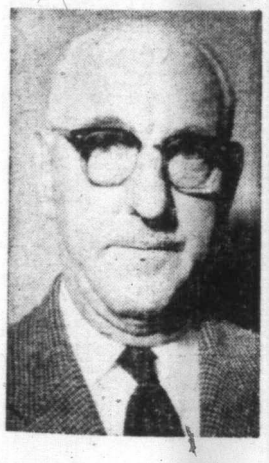

Maybe Smith was prompted to seek out Hammond because the latter owed him some money; maybe not. Anyway, finally in 1895, came word that Billy Hammond had been buried up near Ashcroft.

It was on a hot summer day in August, 1897, that an unkempt, hollow-eyed, gaunt and emaciated looking little character limped into Smith's grocery store and in a wheezing croak announced "I'm home!"

It was Billy Hammond, hardly recognizable behind a heavy growth of whiskers, his hair matted and long. It was readily apparent that he'd been through some extraordinary spell of privation and hardship, but not a word did the Smiths get out of him as to where he'd been or what had happened. However, he was "home," as he put it,

Margaret Thomson Leading Lady of New Gosley Show

Her Skills Versatile

By BERT BINNY

WHILE it is doubtless quite true that nature has turned out too many mezzo-sopranos and baritones and too few contraltos and tenors, this imbalance is no reflection at all on the mezzos and baritones themselves.

It may well make their artistic lives harder for them but it does not or, anyway, should not diminish their intrinsic value. Demand is not a reliable yardstick of artistry.

Right now she is the leading lady in the eighth edition of

Jerry Gosley's "Smile Show" wherein, says she, "I have 12 changes." Otherwise she is also with Bill Murray's "Willie and his Lads and Lassies"; she is a member of the Gilbert and Sullivan Operatic Society; she sings with the Metropolitan United Church choir; she acts with the Victoria Fireside Theatre.

In addition, she makes numerous solo appearances, as with John Dunbar in TV's "Music to Remember," with organist Reg Stone, at the Oak Bay Beach Hotel, on radio and at various concerts around the district.

Margaret actually lived and received her education at Carmyle which is seven miles to the east of Glasgow in the direction of Edinburgh.

She started singing when she was "that high"—very much closer to the floor than she is now. She made her first appearance in public at eight and, two years later, won a local "go as you please" talent contest involving other singers, dancers, pianists, acrobats and assorted variety items.

At 15 she started serious voice training with Ian MacPherson of Glasgow. She joined a choral group of considerable stature, latterly known as the "Berkeley Singers." Here, also, she did solo work. The conductor was Alec Douglas who was a member of the renowned "Orpheus Choir" of Glasgow and Miss Thomson recollects the occasions when the great musician, Sir Hugh Robertson, was guest conductor for the "Berkeley Singers."

While Margaret asserts that the most pronounced "feeling" comes with the performance of church music, she has certainly done excellently in other fields as well.

Back in Scotland she played and sang "Snow White" in "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," "Nellie" in "The Magic Ruby," "Tulip" in "Princess Chrysanthemum" and "Hansel" in "Hansel and Gretel." It is noteworthy that, in this last presentation, she was filling the quite entrancing role of the redoubtable "principal boy," who is invariably a girl.

With the Gilbert and Sullivan Society here in Victoria she was "Katie" in "The Yeoman of the Guard" and appeared in "Oklahoma," "The Bohemian Girl" and "Die Fledermaus."

As an actress Margaret played the barmaid, "Beulah," in the Fireside Theatre production of Ladislas Fodor's "The Vigil" and "Magnesia" in George Bernard Shaw's "Poisons, Passions and Petrefactions."

In Victoria, Miss Thomson trains with Roberto Wood.

At the 1959 Victoria Music Festival she tied for first place with Miss Terry French in the folk song class. This year she placed second to Rose Bowl winner, Eleanor Duff, in the same class and won the mezzo-soprano, Grade "A," competition. And she scored 87 points in the oratorio division where, although she did not reach the finals, her mark was higher than those which were good for top spot in the mezzo class and second in folk singing.

Thus it is quite obvious that pretty good success has attended Margaret Thomson's performances in folk and operetta singing despite her stated affinity for church music.

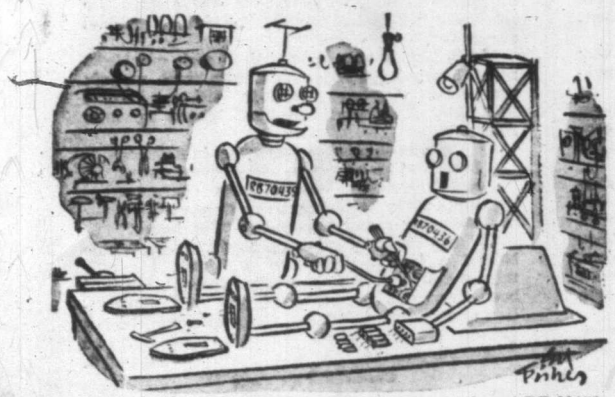

In addition, she has done very well in her theatrical parts. Add to all this the fact that she trained in tap, ballet, Highland (of course!) and acrobatic dancing from the age of six and the end product is a good all-round stage artist.

Doris Farmer Tonkin Writes About Len Hall

He Sells Sea Shells

. . . for Island Souvenirs

ARE you looking for a gift or souvenir really representative of Vancouver Island? Then you should contact Leonard Hall at Royston—he makes the real McCoy.

Mr. Hall—Len to his friends—is always looking for a new way in which to express his creative and artistic instinct. Now well past the allotted three-score and ten years, he has plenty of time for his hobbies, and if they happen to be paying ones, so much the better.

Last summer he hit on the happy expedient of creating attractive and original ash trays from oyster shells which may be had for the choosing at a dump near Fanny Bay where oysters are shucked and packed for sale. True, many people use the shells just as they come for casual ash trays but Len's efforts are more serviceable as well as artistic.

He takes a half shell, sets it on a plaster-of-paris base, gilds the edges, and proceeds to paint a local scene on one of the plane surfaces.

The Comox Glacier is good for a decoration and Elk Falls pops up frequently. Sometimes he uses flower designs. He uses plastic enamel paints which are sold at art stores for decorating figurines.

The first one he made was for his own use but friends saw, admired, and ordered for themselves or gifts.

Len soon graduated from the simple saucer-like shell to more complicated formations which give more scope for decoration.

"It's surprising the different sizes and formations there are," he says. "Every time I go to the dump I find something different."

He did not stop at ash trays. Sometimes shells will grow together at the edges forming a half circle. Len's creative eye saw possibilities for lamps. He makes his plaster-of-paris base and inserts a lamp socket with cord behind the shells. Then he decorates the smooth surfaces, gilds the edges, puts a bulb in the socket and there's his lamp.

From TV lamps to the desk or vanity table type was a short step. Some of the clusters serve better as the lamp base, weighted with the plaster-of-paris, of course, and a socket with a stem goes in the centre. These lamps require a shade.

Much of his work is done on order. Some people like a pair of lamps and a matching ash tray. He will also tailor the design to suit.

"I'll personalize it, too," he promises. "Your name—the name of the person you wish to give it to—the date. Or 'Courtenay,' 'Comox Valley,' or 'Royston,' as you wish."

UNSOLVED MURDER OF TEN MILE POINT

and the Smiths were glad to see him, especially Harry, who was now 25.

It took Hammond weeks to build up his strength, but during the process the past was a closed book. It was during this period of recuperation that the question of his long-standing debt came up, and Billy Hammond gladly cleared it up by signing over the Ten Mile Point property to Smith, plus a little cash to boot.

OF COURSE the property was a little more valuable now. During Hammond's absence Surveyor Tom Gore—in 1891—had subdivided the peninsula, at least down the centre, in a string of three-acre lots fronting on proposed Douglas Road—which became Tudor—reserving a six-acre tract at the western end for a hotel.

Hammond wondered if he could spend a week or so out at the cabin.

"Sure thing," said Smith senior. "Go out and use it whenever you like, as long as you like."

He didn't know for sure, however, if Hammond had been out there when his son was murdered 15 months later.

As Smith unfolded this history, and Langley took notes, one perplexing angle bothered Supt. Hussey. Whoever had stuffed Harry Smith's body under the bunk was a man of unusual strength, but Smith had occasionally referred to Hammond as "little Billy."

"How big was this Hammond," queried Hussey, and Smith hastened to explain that, although Billy was small, he had strength that belied his stature. In fact, there had been times when he'd been a holy terror with his fists, especially on Saturday night's in the King's Head when some of the tars got to mixing it.

Smith recalled that there was an occasion when Hammond knocked a stoker cold, lugged him to the swinging doors and tossed him on the sidewalk.

As Hussey pondered this angle, perhaps he showed a hint of what was in his mind. Smith hastened to counter with the staunch belief that Billy Hammond had nothing to do with his son's death.

"Why, he was like an uncle to Harry!" he expostulated. "He wouldn't have hurt a hair of his head."

"A SMALL MAN," was Hussey's unspoken thought. Where had he heard recently about a small man. It came to him with a sudden flash of recognition. The stranger who'd been found near the E and N tracks at Esquimalt a week or so before!

He went over to a file and pulled the picture of the unidentified heart victim, and showed it to Smith.

"Why, it's Billy!" said Smith, in a tone of almost unbelief.

Hussey then outlined the story of Hammond's sudden demise.

Next day there was a further check of the dead man's clothing, this time for bloodstains. Nothing was discovered. Hammond's few effects were shown to Smith and he recognized the brass match box with the hinged lid. Finally the key was shown him, the peculiar little flat key. But Smith couldn't identify it. Next day, to test a theory, Langley went out to Ten Mile Point and discovered the key fitted the padlock on the cabin door. It was the only such key in existence!

Langley's next step was to try to fill in the movements of Harry Smith and Billy Hammond, and a Cadboro Bay farmer was found who thought he saw a couple of men, one with a gun, on October 23. They were too far off to be sure whether they were young or old.

Prowling the countryside for further leads, Provincial Constables W. R. Atkins, Frank C. Ireland and Frank Murray worked the clock around until they found that Louis Duval of the Royal Oak Hotel had served Hammond a drink of whisky on either Thursday or Friday, Oct. 26 or 27. There was no conversation between the two; Hammond drank up and walked out.

Next Elijah Rowlands of the Burnside Hotel recognized Hammond by his picture, as a man who came in around Oct. 27 and had a couple of drinks.

"He asked me if I knew him," said Rowlands, "and told me that he was an old-timer but had been away for a while.

"I remember him telling me that he once tended bar for Smith at the King's Head," went on Rowlands, "and when he left I think he went towards Craigflower Road."

FOLLOWING IT UP, the third man to identify Hammond as a customer was pioneer pub-keeper Jack Day, whose resort was on the narrow street that led to Esquimalt naval jetty.

"He slept here on the 28th of October," said Day, after a look at his book. "Came in during the late afternoon, had a glass of beer. But I don't think he spoke to anyone. He looked kind of despondent and worried, and in the morning had his breakfast and left around 8.30. I never saw him again."

Which brought Hammond's travels up to Sunday morning, Oct. 29. The next day he was found dead on the other side of the harbor from the jetty, near the E and N tracks.

That was all the information the police could turn up. Nov. 9, three days after the discovery of Harry Smith's body, an inquest was held. Dr. Donald B. Holden gave medical testimony as to the axe blow that ended the young man's life and when all the witnesses had been heard, the jury decided that Harry Smith came to his death at the hands of some person or persons unknown.

Did little Billy Hammond kill Harry Smith? Could he have moved the body without getting blood on his clothing? What was the motive? Had he some dark secret in his immediate past which young Smith unwittingly discovered? These and similar questions were argued by Victorians for months after the event; questions that the passage of 60-odd years has failed to bring closer to solution.

If Hammond was the killer, then by the extraordinary irony of fate he suffered the penalty of death . . . but not at the hands of his fellow men.

Just recently I followed again the track of Dr. Kirker as he walked the E and N track near Admirals Road, and noticed the many changes in the 62 years since Billy Hammond collapsed in lonely agony on a leaf-strewn trail. Now, denuded of trees, the spot is part of the federal drydock property.

Later, back-tracking through old maps and records I was able to pinpoint the site of the murder cabin, and armed with the description "a shelf of land above a rocky bluff east of Telegraph Cove . . . below it a cove with a shingle beach . . . protected by two rocky islets," I thought I had it spotted between dead-end Lockhaven and Baker View Drive to the east.

As I wandered the rocky foreshore, confirmation came unexpectedly from 14-year-old Logan Mathison of 5070 Lockhaven, who remembered in one of his past holiday explorations around the coves, seeing the remains of an old cabin above the point I had in mind. There were only a few boards and an odd log left, but there were marks in the soil where the cabin had once stood.

Gone of course from 562 Johnson Street is the old King's Head saloon where tarry-handed sailors were once moved to trade drinks or punches, while little Billy Hammond kept score behind the bar—a man with a secret in his life—maybe a couple!

The Californians Made Friends with the Natives . .

They Fell in Love with an Island

". . . so the Good Fairy said, 'Well, I dunno, things are pretty difficult today, you know, and times aren't what they used to be Once Upon A, but the traditional reward for this and that is Three Wishes, so let's have them'."

WHEREUPON many people dreaming this age-old dream reply: "Oh, well, yes . . . an island, please, all my own. And enough of what it takes to run it . . . and, of course, somebody frightfully nice to share it with me!"

After which, of course, almost everybody wakes up.

Not Mr. and Mrs. John Dennison Chase. They dreamed it while wide awake, and figured it out, and really worked at it, so now they've got it. Fernie Island, north of Sidney and just across the channel from Canoe Cove. And they adore it.

I went over to see them one lovely summer evening at the end of June. Some years ago a member of my family had taken them across the water for the first time, to see the Island. It was mid-winter. Snowing. Dark and perishingly cold. But they fell in love with it anyway. And that was all I knew about it, or them, until just the other day when a mutual friend told me of their life there, their difficulties and accomplishments, their wild pets, and I was so intrigued that I could hardly wait to telephone them and ask if I might come and talk to them.

THEY WERE WAITING for me with their boat at Canoe Cove; a slender couple, Mr. Chase tall, browned, and blue-eyed, his wife smaller and blonde, but both with the same air of friendliness, capability and energy.

We piled into the Yankee Clipper, which is a smart custom-built half-cabin cruiser, doing a station-wagon job of picking up people and supplies and delivering them to the home base. "It's the only ship ever actually named that," says Mr. Chase, "in spite of popular belief to the contrary. All right there, mate, cast off!" So Mrs. Chase, who says she usually gets called just "deck-hand" when there isn't company about, did a seamanlike job of turning us loose, and we were on our way.

Because I was a guest on my first visit, I was delivered to the special dock — a second utility dock with a hoist is closer to the house — which is built from heavy planks from Piers Island, from a day when the latter was a Doukhobor prison settlement. From here a charming scenic trail winds through fir, balsam, pine and arbutus, to the gay barn-red house on the south point. A bucket of fresh water sits beside the trail at one point, for thirsty deer.

"What about your other pets," I asked, "will they be anywhere about?"

"Oh yes," I was told. "We've made them wait for their dinner until you came! So they'll be there!"

THEY WERE. At least six bright-eyed raccoons, their little black masks as dramatic as something in a theatre production, sitting up on their rears, their enchanting little hands gesturing impatiently for their meal! And on a table inside the rear entrance six tin-foil plates were neatly lined up, containing slices of bread spread with marmalade . . . two loaves a day, we get through, here!

I was taken through the house to the big picture window in the living room, and the plates were laid forth on the moss outside so that I might watch the proceedings. It was fascinating.

Coons, it would appear, have a very sweet tooth, like their distant relatives the bears. And though their table manners leave nothing to be desired, their social behavior hardly reaches the same high level. In other words, they handled their food with great nicety — and argued with deplorable irritation over who should have what. There are now several generations of coons on Fernie receiving their daily bread and marmalade, and the matriarch is an elderly greying lady named Jeannette . . . originally christened John, but changed in due course. There have been Gordon, Hansel and Gretel, Toughy and Sister, also Hagar and Swayne — presumably, I hope, with some complimentary intent. The babies are given pablum when they are young, and cherished and comforted when they fall out of trees.

ON A NEARBY tree stump the present supper was watched with some disdain by a tame seagull. This was Sputnik. Over a period of years there have been several adopted gulls, the first of which was Archie. I also heard a good deal about Dirty Neck, whose first wife was called Hetty—and so on. Crows, too, are part of this family scene, and the present three are named Herman, Sherman and Verman, though the first is now called just Hermie to avoid upsetting a visiting gentleman of the same name who might not have felt flattered!

All evening the coons were a delight to watch. They seemed never still. They appeared and disappeared, up and down trees, behind stumps and along the window ledge to the drinking pan, under and out of a nearby outbuilding, with such swift fluid movements that sometimes it seemed as though there were dozens of them.

The Chases had, originally, not thought particularly of islands. They are natives of California, and when Mr. Chase retired some years ago from the publishing business of Harcourt Brace & Co., he and his wife thought they would look for an acreage with trees, seclusion, and lots of space, somewhere in their own state. The trouble was that they also wanted seafrontage, and though California certainly has plenty of that, its cliffs and beaches, bordered by main highways, are not for private ownership. At least not to the extent desired by my friends.

So then they said to each other, "What is the matter with British Columbia?" And as there was obviously no disparaging answer to that question, to B.C. they came, to look around.

They read the ads . . . and some of the ads offered islands for sale. To which they said, "Well, why not?" And the idea was born.

HOWEVER, when Fernie came to their attention, they were at first very skeptical. Because, poring over various maps of this particular area, they had as strangers come to some extremely amusing conclusions. "Look at this place—that's a city called Sidney. And see these large docks, that will mean all sorts of busy shipping and commercial activities . . . And look at this—Canoe Cove—something about hundreds of boats, with ways for repairs, and such. Looks like a big shipbuilding yard—that would mean smoke and noise! And here's another island right alongside named Coal . . . undoubtedly a mining centre. The whole thing's impossible!"

They were thrilled to find how wrong they were. Fernie Island was quiet, lovely, untainted by commercialism. Ten acres of trees, seclusion, sea views. And a house which would do for awhile. It had a good-sized living room, a kitchen, a bedroom, and a somewhat primitive bathroom. There was a dock of sorts. But there was no electricity, no telephone, and the water supply was an incredibly dirty surface well — with no positive guarantee that any adequate amount would ever be forthcoming.

Pioneers are both born and made by circumstance and challenge. The Chases wanted Fernie Island, they were sure it was for them, and so they bought it, along with the challenges it presented. "We were babes in the wood," said Mrs. Chase. "The thing was that we knew this, and were prepared for anything."

So in February of 1955, a time of year when any sort of weather problem can spring into existence with appalling suddenness in these northern waters, they moved in. They checked for a long time ahead with the government weather bureau, and when it seemed that they might get away with a move without disaster, they shipped their laden trucks of household gear on to a barge at Sidney, and brought them across. It was a fast move, and it had to be. So there they were.

THEIR FIRST problem was the vital one of water. They had been told that the supply in their 15-foot well would last them until the following October. It ran dry in 30 days. They promptly sent for a dowser. He found them a spot which he said looked promising, and they ordered drilling equipment. In the meantime, luckily, it rained . . . and in pots, pans, buckets, barrels and what-have-you, they managed to collect 300 gallons of water.

But the snag to this was that the only way of getting water into the household taps was from the storage tank on its tall platform, which in turn pumped its contents from the dry well. So their rain catch had to be trundled down the trail in a wheelbarrow and dumped into the well.

Presently along came the driller—and a bulldozer had to precede him and dig him a 150-yard road through the woods for his equipment—and to the Chase's horror they found that the drill required fresh water for its cooling and its lubrication, so that their precious hoard went agonizingly down as the drill did likewise. thing helped—they had discovered in the bush a little 18-inch, rock-lined, Indian well, which gave them drinking water.

The drill struck rock two feet from the surface, and it was solid rock the rest of the way. For three days the Chases stood over it and watched, hardly daring to breathe. Or to wash. Because after all, on a very small island, if your first effort draws a blank there aren't too many places in which it will be worth while to try again for a well. Suddenly, there it was! Forty-five feet down —and it was giving them 100 gallons an hour.

"But," said the operator, "if you want to take a chance on another ten feet, I just might get more."

The Chases are nothing if not sporting. "Down you go," they said, and were duly rewarded. They now have a fine subterranean rock-pool of never-failing, clear, cold water with a capacity of 250 gallons an hour . . . all they can ever need!

So that problem was happily behind them.

NOW THEY TURNED their attention to electricity and telephone. There were many difficulties here, and in the meantime they had been using kerosene lamps and cooking on the old wood and coal stove that had come with the house.

"That stove!" said Mrs. Chase, shaking her head. "It came to have a personality all its own! It fought us every inch of the way, and we cursed it and called it names until, in the end, it simply became a member of the family and I think we grew to love it."

It was Captain F. E. Lewis, the owner of neighboring Coal Island, who came to their aid. He had discovered at the bottom of the channel several fathoms of the cable which had once supplied Salt Spring and been abandoned for newer material. He had hooked this to the surface for his own use, and now made available to the new owners of Fernie the 800 feet or so which they required.

This made life on the island infinitely easier, although the old stove and the lanterns were kept for emergencies, and have occasionally come in very handy. Other changes, too, had been taking place over the months. The bathroom became a utility room, the bedroom was turned into a study and library, and a new master bedroom and guest room were built, each with its own bathroom.

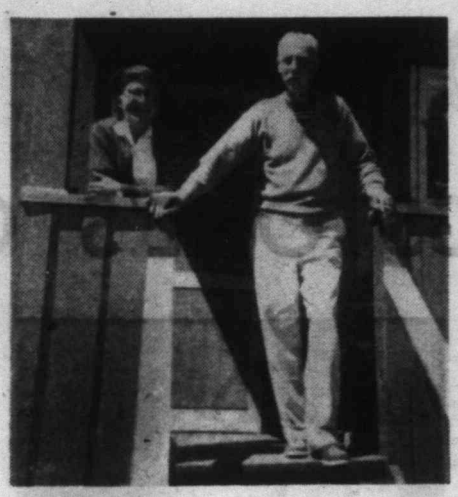

The evolution of the old bathroom created something of a problem. The plumber had wanted no part of its out-moded equipment, and had firmly left all three pieces sitting outside amid the fern and the salal, where they did very little to enhance the beauty of the rustic scene. In fact in no time at all the Chases found they couldn't stand it any longer. They finally got someone to take the ancient claw-footed bath off their hands, and then, on a clear still day when the water was like a pond, they loaded the other two relics into their dinghy and proceeded to dump them into the channel. The washbowl was no trouble at all . . . but the third item, motivated by some trick of the tide, spiralled slowly and with infinite deliberation into the depths, and as it went the lid kept opening and closing, waving them a last, long, pathetic farewell . . . Hysterically they waved back, until the object at last disappeared.

TODAY THE HOUSE on Fernie Island leaves little, if anything, to be desired. The rooms are spacious, and furnished with charm and taste. The living room has lovely Chinese prints and Oriental objets d'art. It looks south across the sound to the Olympics. It has a cosy fireplace. There are many bookshelves—in fact the library has shelves from floor to ceiling, and many of the works that fill them are first editions. There are plenty of roomy closets. And most of these improvements have been made by the Chases themselves. He is the carpenter—obviously a first-class one—and his wife is the painter. An enviable team.

Five boats serve the island's transportation needs. A dinghy for puttering—and d... bathroom furniture—an outboard, the Yankee Clipper, and a 38-foot cruiser named Merva for distant adventuring, with the tender to serve her—Baby Merva. The run to Canoe Cove takes about five minutes.

When I inquired about the history of Fernie Island, Mr. Chase went and fetched me a strange object—a flat, ornamented brass pin about five inches long. A hairpin. "This," he said, "belonged to Alaska Mary. We think!"

Mary, it appears, was an Indian woman. She

acquired Fernie and Goudge Islands, now known as Little Mary's Island and Big Mary's Island, respectively, from, presumably, one Tom Kamaree, a Sandwich Island man who was then a farmer on Coal Island. He had bought both Fernie and Goudge, then just numbers on a map, for the enormous sum of $44, on a grant from Queen Victoria in 1889, and the document covering this may still be seen in the legislative building's records. After that, during some vaguely chronicled period, the southerly one was known as Young Island, and then later was being recorded as Fernie, for the brother of the man after whom the interior town near Cranbrook is named. Nobody knows who Young was, or where he came into the picture.

As for Alaska Mary, there are various stories. It appears that she lived on Fernie . . . rock walls, a ruined cellar, a rock-lined cooler, the 18-inch well, attest to this . . . with a white man who may or may not have been her husband, but who certainly walloped her on the head one day in a quarrel, left her for dead, and disappeared forever.

After this, the story goes, Mary moved to Goudge with another husband, but had no better luck this time. The man stepped out of their cabin one day during a terrific storm, straight into the path of a fir tree, which came crashing down, killing him instantly. Poor Mary mourned him sadly. In fact, she mourned him so long and so loudly that eventually all the neighbors within hearing could stand it no longer. They complained bitterly to the government, and demanded that something be done.

For a long time nothing was, Mary went on wailing, and everybody was slowly going mad, when someone came up with a solution. The government acted on it.

"Mary," they said, "you are not a native, you don't belong here, and we've had enough of all this. Go back to Alaska and take that infernal racket with you." So she went.

And that, as far as the Chases know, was the last anyone ever heard of her. Just as well.

Today the Chases spend their time cherishing their delightful little world, and reclaiming it from "jungle." Wisely, they have kept their actual gardening to a minimum, with just a few flower beds close to the house, and several bright hanging baskets, which add color and require little care. But they have worked like beavers clearing trails to every view point and beach, and have named them.

They uncovered a huge mossy outcrop near the island's centre, a mass of solid rock which they promptly christened Alcatraz, though luckily it harbors no criminals and is certainly more attractive than the one in San Francisco Bay. When I asked what they did in the winter time, they were a little vague and said they worked outside all through the year anyway, and were always busy. They didn't seem to think there is much winter here, which I thought was a unique attitude on the part of Californians, and could only mean they were far too content with life and living even to notice the weather very much.

And so it seems to be. More . . . they have come to love this country, and have found British Columbians friendly and kind, wherefore they plan to become Canadian citizens. And when the reasons are these, no sincerer compliment can be paid to any country. Nor could the Dominion welcome two more-gracious new additions to her population.

HOME MARKETS BEST

By
R. M. ANGUS

AS a general rule, stamps realize the highest price in the country of origin. Thus, stamps of the German states, while quite unsaleable locally, might bring a fair price in San Francisco or Milwaukee, where the population is, to a great extent, of German origin. But the best price would be realized in Germany itself, where such stamps as Wurtemburg, Saxony, Oldenburg and other German states are eagerly sought after.

A case in point came to my notice many years ago when the widow of a colonel who had served in the Boer War came to me with no less than £14 (sterling) of Orange Free State stamps with the V.R.I. surcharge which her husband had bought as a speculation.

Thinking there would be no difficulty in disposing of them I sent them to leading dealers in London and New York. In each case they were returned with the comment that there was no market for them. Finally I thought of Emil Tamsen of Nylstroom, in the Transvaal, who was the leading dealer in that part of the world, and asked him if he would be interested. He replied that he certainly would. They were duly sent to him and obtained a good price. Furthermore he informed me that any of the stamps that were unsaleable due to minor defects could be used as postage as they had never been demonetized even though it was over 30 years since the Boer War. For all I know they may still be in use.

Curiously enough, all the early "cents" value of Canada are still good for postage if anyone were foolish enough to use them. The unused stamps, especially those issued before 1900 and a few later, are worth far more than their original value.

The Westland Centennial stamps issued by New Zealand on May 16 are very different in design from recent commemoratives. Instead of depicting views or subjects of historical interest, the new series shows symbolic figures associated with the settlement of Westland — The Explorer (2d.), the Gold Digger (3d.) and the Pioneer Woman (8d.). Considerable research was undertaken to ensure the accuracy of the costumes and backgrounds shown on the stamps.

MISSIONARY'S WIFE

IN LIVINGSTONE'S COUNTRY

MUCH has been written, and rightly so, about those high-spirited Christian missionaries who carry the gospel of our faith into every corner of the world—from the jungles of Colombia to the plains of India.

We know something of the hardships and difficulties faced by these modern crusaders. But what of their wives, the unsung heroines of many an isolated Christian outpost?

Faced with the same hardships, the same difficulties, with loneliness and anxiety, their lot, by material standards, seems hard, yet almost without exception, these women are happy, content that they are working beside their husbands in the service of God.

One such is vivacious, dark-haired Jean Anderson, who grew up in Victoria, but who now calls the tiny Northern Rhodesian settlement of Serenje, home. Here, in a strange land, among a primitive people, only just beginning to rise above the savage rites of witchcraft, she leads a full life, caring for her home and three small children, and assisting husband Fred in his mission work—work that takes him, and sometimes Jean and the children, ranging over hundreds of miles of African bush country, far from the nearest civilization.

"We're very lucky," she says, "because we've got the best job in the world. Helping other people!"

SOON AFTER the Rev. Fred Anderson graduated from theological college, both he and his wife, Jean, felt called to offer themselves for mission service. Their choice turned to strife and hate-torn Africa.

"It seemed to us," said Jean seriously, "that there was no land more in need of Christian love and goodwill."

Fred's church, the United Church of Canada, approved their plan and, after a brief period spent in training and preparation, the young couple, with their baby son, Douglas, left for Nandoa, a booming, modern town in the copper belt of Northern Rhodesia. This was only a waypoint in their journey, however, and after a few days' rest they were off again, by road this time, headed for Chitambo, a small government and mission station, more than 200 miles out in the wilderness.

This is historic ground, for it was nearby that the great Soul of missionary-explorer Dr. David Livingstone, finally came to rest, after a lifetime of tireless effort. Here, in Chitambo, the Andersons took up residence in a straw-thatched, three-room hut that had originally been built, more than 50 years ago, for the missionary granddaughter of Livingstone, a Mrs. Moffat.

IT WAS FORTUNATE for Jean that she had a sense of humor, as well as a strong will to make a success of her new life, for the first few months were strange, and sometimes frightening. Bats, hundreds of them, slept in the hut's thatched roof, and occasionally she would awake to find that one had dropped on to the pillow, beside her.

"They used to terrify me," she admits frankly, "but now I'm getting used to them."

The cement floors in their new home, a necessary protection against ants, were cold and cheerless, and as there was no electricity, all lighting and cooking had to be done with kerosene, while the clothes irons operated on gasoline. Great care has to be taken in this part of the world that all laundry, especially clothing, is carefully ironed, for small flies lay their eggs in the washing as it dries on the line, and if these eggs are not killed by heat, they quickly hatch out, and the larva bury themselves in the wearer's skin.

"Buying the family food was something of a problem at first," mused Mrs. Anderson. "You see, there were no corner stores there; in fact, no stores at all, so two or three weeks' supplies at a time had to be ordered from Nandola or Broken Hill, both about 200 miles distant. If I forgot to order such items as flour, sugar or coffee, then we went without. I'll say this for my buying though," she continued with a laugh, "my family didn't waste away."

WITH DUGGIE and baby Neil, the Rev. and Mrs. Anderson

WHEN FRED had to go off on field trips, he would be away for many days, completely out of touch in remote back country. Jean, sitting alone at night in the dimly-lit hut, with the children asleep in the next room, could hear the howls of jackals and the occasional roar of a lion, and on the still of the African night the noises sounded alarmingly close. What if one of the beasts should smash down the frail door? With a shudder, she would force her mind away from these thoughts, back to the sewing and the darning and the church work that kept her evenings busy; for when her husband was away, added responsibility fell to her. She would be called upon for advice, went out visiting the sick in the squalid villages around the mission, and sometimes conducted the services in the little, mud brick church that served the surrounding area.

"It was heartwarming the way those people helped me," she says. "When I joined the woman's auxiliary, two former members who had moved out of the district, used to come more than 50 miles, travelling in hot, overcrowded buses, so that they could attend our meetings and help me get started on the right foot."

All the while, she had to see that her own home and children were well cared for, because, above everything else, the missionary wife is a teacher who must set an example to the more primitive women around so that they can learn something of the modern child care and home craft.

To help Jean, the Andersons employ one houseboy, a thin, nervous man called Ba Joseph. Incidently, Ba is a term of friendship and respect in the local La La tongue. Joseph, who with his wife, Ba Mary, lives in a small cottage in the mission garden, is devoted to the Andersons and their children. He looks after the cleaning of the house, and the ironing, at which he is an expert.

"My husband has never had his collars so smooth before."

Jean, who likes working in the kitchen, does all the cooking for her family. It is somewhat unusual in Africa for white people to do their own cooking, but the Andersons feel that they must live unpretentiously, if they are to win the friendship and confidence of the people they have come to help. For the same reason, she has no car of her own and walks to the numerous church meetings, pushing her baby carriage nearly five miles, over roads two inches thick in dust and in temperatures up to a broiling eighty-five degrees.

"Man, that's exercise," she comments wryly.

A THRILL for Jean and the children is to accompany Fred on one of his field trips. When he is on his own, visiting the more inaccessible villages, he always carries a bicycle in the Land Rover, a vehicle similar to a jeep. Driving until the going becomes too rough, he takes down the bike and pedals on. Sometimes the country is so rugged that even the bike is left behind and the journey finished on foot. He has made it his policy on these trips to live as simply as do the natives. This means eating only one meal a day, usually consisting of mealie porridge, scooped up by hand from a community pot, around which sit the villagers, eating and chatting with their guest. Meat is a luxury almost unknown to these people, but they make up for this lack of protein by eating insects, and on special occasions Mr. Anderson may find himself dining off fried locusts, with a side dish of white ants.

"I'm afraid that it's too exotic a diet for me," says his wife with a shudder, and when she and the children are on the trip a supply of more conventional food is taken along.

AFTER a settling-down period at Chitambo, during which they learned the La La language, and came to know and like the native people, word arrived that they were to move to Serenje, another government station, where Fred's own church had just built and presented a manse to the United Church of Rhodesia, which they were to occupy.

The little Land Rover was heavily loaded with Andersons, large and small, filling the front seat, while Joseph and Mary perched proudly atop the mound of luggage in the back, like children on a hayride, as they set off for their new home, after a sad farewell from the dark-skinned congregation.

"The new manse was a wonderful improvement over our old quarters," observed Jean, "and it only has one slight inconvenience. Like all the houses out here, it is heated by a single open fireplace, and as it was damp and raw on the day we arrived, and the cement floors seemed cold, Fred built a cheerful fire to take off the chill. Within a few minutes we were all coughing and spluttering as the smoke, instead of going up the chimney, billowed through the house. Later, we discovered the trouble. One of the workmen, with a grievance against the building contractor, had plugged the chimney with cement. Fred is still chipping away, in his spare time, and some day we hope to be able to use our fireplace."

AT SERENJE, as had been the case at Chitambo, the Andersons found the district commissioner, who is the senior government official in the area, to be a broad-minded, liberal man, intent on bettering race relations and improving the lot of the Negro people in his charge. And to Jean and Fred, both working for the brotherhood of man, this official attitude was of great help.

Another source of help was the Rev. Jackson Nwopi, a native clergyman who shared his little church with Fred, and whose wife, Bo Anna, became one of Jean's closest friends. The two women often work together—visiting the sick, teaching in Sunday school, and holding meetings among the women of the church. To one of these meetings, recalls Jean, "came an elderly lady who was very poor, even by African standards. She had no money at all, but still insisted on giving to the

CHEMIST ASSURES the SUNBATHER

TAN Without Tears

SUDDENLY it's summer! With outdoors beckoning and vacation a reality!

It's the time again—when gentle warmth soothes frazzled nerves, tired bodies—and the great outdoors offers its multi-vitamin compound of sun, water and air.

Anyhow, that's the dream.

But, suddenly it's August, and Nature doesn't seem quite so gentle. The baking heat, the glazing sun bring the realization that the sun is not always kind.

It's a pity, too. There's a bit of the sun-worshipper in all of us—and who doesn't like to acquire a suntan?

Suntan is really more than a fad. The rays of the sun produce vitamin D, which can be stored up for the winter, and a suntanned skin is almost a cosmetic with many people. You've seen handsome white teeth gleam behind a suntanned skin. Small wonder both men and women love it.

Unhappily, what often occurs is a severe sunburn, even lost time at work. When the losses are added up, statisticians say, there will be 2,000,000 sufferers who will lose a total of 60,000,000 work days!

But, it needn't happen at all—not to anybody—not one hour need be lost! Not a moment of sleep lost to pain!

A dozen years ago, a chemist investigating the methods of screening out burning rays without loss of the tanning rays, made an important discovery. Other compounds did this, but the combination developed by Charles A. Rolley did a lot more.

Tested under the most severe burning sun in the world—in the Gulf of Mexico—the compound created the most glowing tan anyone could desire—but no pain and no semblance of a burn!

The U.S. Army learned about it and tried it out on troops in the Pacific under extreme sun conditions. The earlier tests were confirmed.

There was no longer a question about its effectiveness, but Rolley added another property which made his product even more effective than usual screening ointments.

He incorporated a method of skin re-moisturizing. By replacing the skin moisture lost to the sun's rays—he eliminated the wrinkling and skin peeling which is another defacement that sun-worshippers—especially women—abhor.

SUN TANNING is a historical form of beautification. Cleopatra is described by a biographer as dressing her hair in the sun to "steal some of its lustre for herself, not only in the jet of her locks, but the burnished complexion she adored."

As a matter of fact, the literature of the times and of many periods since, often described the "burnished" color of skin as a handsome adornment to a noble prince, a warrior, or a beautiful woman.

We don't call it "burnished" any more, but we still love the rich and flattering golden tan.

Is there such a thing as sun without sorrow? Certainly. Proper precautions insure this. One of the first is a thorough coating of sun screen lotion rubbed into the skin—especially around knees, forehead, nose, ears and shoulders.

But there are other things about sun exposure you should know. For example, a misty day can give you as much of a burn as a bright day. Burns also come from white sands, from water surfaces.

On a misty day, tiny droplets of water in the air reflect and focus the sunlight on your skin. Ripples of the water also can collect sun rays from many sources to focus them on your body.

And, of course, snow! Exposure in snow country can produce as bad a burn as mid-summer rays. Often this comes as a surprise to ski addicts and snow "bunnies."

The worst burns come to those whose complexion is pale and tender. If you have very sensitive skin, remember that early exposures should be restricted somewhat—if you don't have a screen lotion. Increase the amount of time in the sun as you begin to tan.

If you've been forgetful, then by all means get out of the sun when the skin starts to turn pink. This is an early warning. If you stay out much longer, you can get a severe burn.

Under any circumstances, it is important to wear sun glasses. They are important to protect your eyes. A burn on your eyeballs or exposure to excessive light may make them smart, even inflict a permanent injury.

The British Army invariably equips its troops in tropical areas with lenses made of optical glass—not the low-priced type of sun glasses you buy for a few cents in a drug store. Their screening quality is small—often they have none.

With these precautions, you can face the sun without sorrow. You can acquire the tan without tears.

church. When the offering was taken, there, among the sixpences and shillings, was her contribution, a hen's egg. It made me think of the story of the widow's mite."

Socially, too, the Andersons are kept busy. They enjoy entertaining, especially their many colored friends, and Jean takes every bit as much trouble in baking cakes, cookies, and other delicacies for them as she does when the district commissioner himself comes to call. Incidently, the party game that intrigues their African guests most, and which they love to play, is that old North American standby, monopoly.

IN SOME PARTS of Rhodesia, especially in the towns, there is strong opposition to mixing socially with the Negroes, but to Fred and Jean, the color of the skin makes no difference. On one occasion two of their small sons, Duggie and Stephen, out playing, encountered a deadly snake. Duggie managed to jump over it safely, but little Stephen, following behind, would have been bitten by the angry reptile, which had its head raised to strike, had not a Negro woman who happened to be watching the two lads, rushed in and pulled the toddler to safety.

"These people are true friends, prepared to give their lives for us or our family," says Jean. "Why should we object to having them in our home."

One of the problems of life in Serenje is the lack of medical facilities, for the nearest doctor is more than 50 miles away, while one must go to Broken Hill or Nandola if hospitalization is needed. Jean is very thankful that her family has kept remarkably well, and that she is the only one who has had occasion to make the long trip to hospital.

Once, while Fred was away on mission work, she had an attack of appendicitis and had to be rushed to hospital in the district commissioner's car, through a drenching tropical rain, over partially flooded roads. "At times it was more like a boat than a car trip," she recalls.

Another occasion was the birth of her third baby, Neil, and as Fred was getting the car ready to drive her to Broken Hill, a small incident occurred but one that meant a great deal to her. Bo Anna and a group of women from the little church came up to the house to say goodbye.

"We will pray for you and for your new baby," they said.

Those few words proved to Jean that the work Fred and she were doing was not in vain, for among the African people, and even Christian Africans, many of the taboos of witchcraft are still feared and obeyed. One of these taboos is never to mention a woman's pregancy or the baby she is expecting, as the evil spirits might hear and do some harm. These women, by openly speaking of the event, had proved that their Christian faith was strong enough to vanquish the old pagan superstitions.

"That thought made me happy during all the long drive to the hospital," she remembers.

These are but a few of the countless events in the life of a missionary's wife. It has its irritations, its discomforts, its frustrations; but it has something else, something much more important, and that is the reward of knowing that one is being of service to others in the cause of Christianity.

In a year or two, Jean and Fred will be coming back to Canada on a well-earned leave, but after that they want to go back to Serenje, for they know that there, work is waiting for both of them.

It Took Vision to Realize

SIDNEY would BOOM

By

James K. Nesbitt

"SIDNEY promises to become of considerable importance," said The Colonist in August of 1891. "Nonsense," said backward Victorians. "Too far out . . . fine place for an outing in good weather . . . but no one will ever live there. Nonsense, all this talk of a town at Sidney."

The little town on the northeasterly end of the Saanich Peninsula had just been started. In the nearly 70 years since, it has had its ups and downs—but has grown until it is indeed "of considerable importance," and growing all the time.

Tourists now swarm through the place, on ferry systems linking Vancouver Island with the American and Canadian mainlands.

It's the market town for an increasing number of people who work in Victoria, but prefer to live in the country. The whole Sidney area has become, more or less, another of Victoria's expanding bedrooms.

First mention of Sidney was in The Colonist of August, 1891. "SIDNEY TOWN SITE — The steamer North Star arrived last night from the town site of Sidney, North Saanich, where her owner, Mr. C. W. Morris is busy at work upon the wharf, which is being erected there. It will be 300 by 150 feet, and will have a large warehouse erected upon it. Great progress is being made with town improvements and with the expected enterprises that are there to be inaugurated Sidney promises to become of considerable importance."

W. H. Bissett, a young man of vision, who yearned for the freedom of rural life, the adventure of a new place, moved to Sidney and opened the first hotel. He was then conveniently close to Bannockburn Farm at Mount Newton, where he was courting a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Thompson. Every few days he traveled between Bannockburn and his hotel on horseback, and from Bannockburn he took Miss Fannie a-riding through the Mount Newton countryside.

They were married in March of 1892: "A Saanich wedding — St. Stephen's Church, South Saanich, was yesterday the scene of a wedding. The contracting parties were Mr. W. H. Bissett, proprietor of the Sidney Hotel and Miss Fannie Thompson, third daughter of Mr. William Thompson. The bridesmaid was Miss Reflynhart, and Mr. Duncan Ross supported the groom, while the ceremony was performed by Rev. Mr. Christmas. The party, numbering about 100, subsequently adjourned to Mr. Thompson's, where a sumptuous repast was enjoyed, and the numerous marriage presents admired."

Mr. Bissett took his bride to the Sidney Hotel, and there, in April of 1893 some Sidney history was made, as duly recorded in The Colonist: "The pioneer Sidneyite — Mrs. Bissett, wife of the proprietor of Sidney House on Wednesday evening last had the distinguished honor of presenting to the public the first native of the city of Sidney. The little lady bears her honors with becoming modesty."

The year of 1892 saw a minor boom in Sidney, and adventurous Victorians took to driving out on fine Sundays to see what was going on.

They could read, too, about the developments, in their morning newspaper:

"So little has been said or printed about the new community of Sidney, Saanich district, that a surprise awaited Mr. W. H. Snider and a party of his friends who drove out there. They found that the improvements carried out had been on a wholesale scale. There is a good general store doing a fine business, a post-office, and an excellent hotel, besides a boat-building establishment, and several other infant, but flourishing industries."

Chief feature of Sidney, so long ago, as now, was Beacon Avenue: "The principal street, a mile long, is as straight as an arrow, and would be a credit to any city."

The early-day residents made do with coal oil lamps, but they lived in hope that the new-fangled invention of electricity, then becoming all the style in Victoria — though there were those who said it would not last—would soon be at Sidney: "Of course, Sidney has not yet got either electric light or tramcars, but they, like the railway, are bound to come."

There was much talk then of a railway to link the new town with the metropolis of Victoria 20 miles away, though the idea had many scoffers.

"The promoters of the Victoria and Sidney Railway have been requested by Mayor Beaven to prepare a bylaw embodying their wishes, and submit it to the board of aldermen."

By December of 1892 there was a sawmill at Sidney: "Today there is in Sidney a comfortable hotel, a commodious wharf, butcher's, blacksmith's and carpenter's shops, general store, and last, but not least, the new sawmill.

"The people of Sidney have reason to feel elated over the improvements that have been made during the last few months. Mr. White, superintendent, and one of the partners in the Toronto and B.C. Milling and Manufacturing Company deserves great credit for the manner in which he has pushed work on the mill to completion.

"When the engines were put in today by the experienced millwright, Mr. Robert Hunter of Vancouver, everything went as smoothly as clockwork, turning out at the rate of 50,000 feet per day. The neat and staunch manner in which the building was completed is due to Mr. Mark Hewitt of Toronto, who superintended it. Considering the delay Mr. White had in waiting for machinery—some 30 days—he has done really quick work. In three months he has built the best, cheapest and quickest-built mill of its size on this coast."

The Victoria and Sidney Railway was opened in June of 1894, and there was great excitement, and soon the line was called "the Cordwood Express," as it went chugging along through the Saanich peninsula, carrying farmers to and from town, cyclists on outings, whole families off to the beach at Sidney on Sundays and holidays.

Just about everyone who was anyone at all turned up for the opening, as noted in The Colonist: "At the invitation of Messrs. Paterson and Riley, the initial excursion and informal opening of the Victoria and Sidney line took place yesterday. The locomotive and train, decorated with bunting and flowers, started from Third Avenue at 1.30 p.m., making the entire run inside of 30 minutes."

There was a party at Sidney: "The park reserve . . . was thrown open to the guests and a sumptuous repast was spread. Dancing on the spacious platform, boating and other amusements were also indulged in, the party returning at 9 p.m., and on arrival at the Victoria terminal three hearty cheers were given (in response to the call of Mr. Yates) for Mr. and Mrs. Paterson and Mr. and Mrs. Riley, and the delighted excursionists were, thanks to the tramcar officials, met at the Saanich Road by street cars in waiting for the party."

Everyone agreed Sidney was the perfect place for picnics—away from it all—away from the Victoria that was becoming so crowded: "A general opinion prevailed that Sidney and its neighborhood will be the coming picnic ground for Victoria, the pine grove surrounding the bay, reserved by the railway company for park and pleasure grounds, affording a most delightful and shady retreat, being in all respects perfection for picnic parties."

Here are some of the prominent folk who went along on that history-making train ride more than 65 years ago: Mrs. Thomas Earle and daughter, Dr. and Mrs. O. M. Jones, Mr. and Mrs. Noah Shakespeare, Mr. David R. Ker, Mr. Henry Brackman, the Misses Heisterman, Mr. Bernie Heisterman, Mrs. J. E. Crane, Mr. Crane, Jr., Mr. Selig, Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Scott, Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Yates, Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Austin, Mr. J. H. Austin, Mr. A. F. Englehardt, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Bone, Mrs. Simon Leiser, Mr. J. Gray, Mr. and Mrs. Sparrow, Mr. J. A. Aikman, Mr. E. E. Billingshurst, Mr. and Mrs. R. T. Williams.

" . . . about 1,000 people visited this popular resort on Saturday and there were over a carload of bicycles come, too. The fine roads of this neighborhood always draw crowds of cyclists."

But the good people of Sidney grew somewhat tired of the visitors knocking on their doors asking for a drink? "Why does not the railway company bring water for the excurtionists to drink? It is a great annoyance to the villagers to be kept busy suppiying the wants of these people gratis, while the railway gets the profit."

"On Thursday evening Miss Lillian Armson and Mr. Gideon Hicks gave a very interesting musical and literary recital in the Methodist Church. Professor Duloune, who teaches music in the district, presided at the organ . . .

"This was followed by a rendering by Miss Armson, entitled The Womanly Scheme (which caused much amusement, especially to the ladies). Mr. Hicks then gave 'The Holy City' and Miss Armson a touching representation of 'Angela, the Widow's Light,' where a little girl who is gathering shellfish on the beach meets her uncle going out to his yacht. Shortly afterwards Angela is swept away by the tide, and an immense breaker lights her onto the deck of her uncle's yacht, right before his astonished, loving eyes."

When the tears were dry, after this emotional experience, coffee and cakes were served.
